INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Favorite Characters in Genesis.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Genesis Teaches About God and Human Relationships.

Genesis, the book from which the lessons of the quarter are taken, as its name indicates, is a book of beginnings. It contains the only reliable information we have of the origin of the heavens and the earth, plant and animal life, human life, institutions, and relations.

Lesson for April 3.

God was before all things. Everything but God had a beginning. The things which are came to be by the creative act of a personal God. Man himself came into being by the creative act of God.

Lesson for April 10.

An explanation of the ills and sorrows of the world can be made only on the basis of the historic fall of man as recorded in the Bible. Man is not what he was when he came from the Creator's hand. The prime actor in this tragedy was the personal, cunning, and malicious being called "the Devil." Because man is a free being, possessing the power of choice, sin entered through the act of man's will in believing the Devil instead of God.

Lesson for April 17.

Following man's fall, God gave the promise of a redeemer. God chose Abraham to be the head of the new race through which this gracious promise was to be realized. The failure of this new race to carry out God's plan is the explanation of the disordered world.

Lesson for April 24.

Lot's prosperity was due to his relationship to his uncle, Abram. In spite of this fact, he selfishly grasped for the best. Abram, to avert possible strife between Lot and himself, accorded to Lot the choice of the best of the land. Though Lot's choice involved him in trouble, Abram graciously went to his rescue, delivering him from his oppressor, thus being a fine example of the art of living in peace.

Lesson for May 1.

Isaac was a child of the covenant, gentle and peace-loving. Though a lover of peace, he had enemies. His very prosperity incited the envy of the Philistines. His peaceable withdrawal from them gave him increased influence.

Lesson for May 8.

Esau sold his birthright for a bowl of pottage. The birthright was the right of being at the head of the patriarchal family. In a time of physical exhaustion he relinquished his claim to the future in order to gratify a present desire.

Lesson for May 15.

Jacob's scheming involved him in trouble. On his flight from an enraged brother he was overtaken by night and obliged to sleep in a field with a stone for his pillow. It was under such circumstances that God gave him the vision at Bethel.

Lesson for May 22.

On Jacob's return to Canaan to meet Esau, the Angel of the Lord wrestled with him at the ford of Jabbok. Jacob's self-will needed to be broken before he could enter Canaan. He was humbled by the dislocation of his thigh. When thus humbled, he quit wrestling and clung to God. Jacob did not get the blessing through wrestling, but because of his clinging to God. It was easy for Jacob to be reconciled to his brother because he was now right with God.

Lesson for May 29.

Joseph was hated by his brethren. The father's favoritism fanned this hatred into a flame, and resulted in his being sold into slavery.

Lesson for June 5.

Joseph's success was not primarily due to the fact that he was a good worker, but to the fact that the good hand of his God was upon him. Joseph was not a self-made, but a God-made man.

Lesson for June 12.

Though Joseph severely tested his brethren, he graciously forgave them and nourished them through the years of famine. He knew that God had sent him to be their deliverer.

Lesson for June 19.

In old age after many years of sorrow for the loss of Joseph, Jacob goes to Egypt and is there nourished through the famine by Joseph. After Jacob's death, Joseph continues his gracious attitude to his brethren.

Three Kinds of People

There are three kinds of people in the world, the wills, the won'ts and the can'ts. The first accomplish everything; the second oppose everything; the third fail in everything.—Selected.

He Is the Loser

It has been said that certain insects which sting, lose their lives when they sting. A man who uses his tongue to express the venom of his hate loses that which to him is better than life.

A Unique Will

A merchant was told he had but a month to live, so he called in a lawyer and said:

"Fix it so my overdraft at the bank goes to my wife, she can explain it.

"My equity in my car goes to my son. He will then have to go to work to keep up the payments.

"Give my good will to the supply houses, they took some awful chances on me and are entitled to something.

"My equipment you can give to the junkman, he has had his eyes on it for several years.

"I want six of my creditors for pallbearers, they have carried me so long, they might just as well finish the job."

The bathing suits are scantier looking than ever this year, but I don't suppose it is on account of the depression. I'd like to get one, but the dignity of my position must be upheld at all costs.

I always feel silly when I go to shake hands with a person and one of my fingers gets above the other fellow's thumb. And I also feel like giving a fellow a kick in the pants when he shakes hands like he was handling a bull frog or an eel.

I never seem to be able to judge the intensity of the sun's rays on my tender epidermis. But I always feel repaid by thinking that if I cover my shoulders with a manly coat of tan, people will forget to cast their eyes on that food container, known as the stomach, which is beginning to show a tendency to protrude, even between meals.

The joys of bidding on property—when all the known bidders have stopped and the crier has already hollered "are you all done"—and then a new one steps up to make you sweat for another five minutes, but finally giving in.

Oh, well, the original owner will probably redeem it anyway, but it was fun while it lasted, and someday, maybe, I'll buy another one.

Much hoarding of money may be going on, but if it is, very few newspapermen are in on it.

I never knew a lowly groundhog would turn on anybody, but I not only witnessed that Sunday, but also saw Waller Hoye, the one he turned on unexpectedly, jump about three feet in the air, and register indecission, surprise, action, fear, and anxiety, all at once. He could easily have broken the high jump record.

If you want to forget your troubles, step under a cold shower bath. I defy any man under a cold shower to think of anything but the cold shower.

The First Anniversary

On June 27, at 7:27 p. m., year 1931, I was pronouncing "I Will," in no uncertain terms, and under quite a bit of tension for fear that the girl holding to my left arm might not summon up the courage to throw herself away for life on an unknown printer's devil, associate editor, pressman, and unknown column writer. But she did.

Having gone through the first year without adding new scars to my body, I can recommend the double harness with great pleasure. Having lived as a married man a total of four weeks, five days, fourteen hours, and 19 minutes, during the entire year, I guess I ought to know—namely, honeymoon, two weeks; Chicago, four days; Columbus, Ohio, one and one-half days; in Oakland, two weeks; Jackson's Mill, one-half hour; at Morgantown, two hours and 19 minutes; exclusive of the seconds.

P. S. There'll probably be a lot more to tell when the second anniversary rolls around. Just wait until the hunt for house, and furniture starts in October.

For Lokal Kolyum

The following items were received for the lokal kolyum, but they were too late for the lokal page so we had to stick them in here, and run the danger of spoiling the rest of my stuff.

It is rumored that Jake Potluck is about to get married for the fourth time. Sentiment in Garrett county has always been against the fourth term proposition.

The committee from the "Did you hear this" Sewing circle started out with flowers for a sick clubmember but decided it would be better to wait until the old girl died.

Mr. Cheatem surprised the preacher and everybody else for that matter last Sunday by going to church. From the upturned eyes of the congregation the pastor thought the people were praying for him, but it is my opinion they were expecting the ceiling to give away.

A handsome little rain paid us a welcome visit last Sunday evening.

Mr. Parker Anywhere called on Miss Lucy Morals last Tuesday, ditto Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. Mr. A., just what are your intentions?

Finan Dandy purchased a new automobile on Monday. Look out, girls!

We are sorry to report that Jersey, who has been suffering from eating too much wild onions, is still confined to her stall.

And will you all kindly confine your remarks about this column to the constructive?

What do you expect when it gets hot, and the beads of perspiration (I never did like that word; just say sweat) oozes through the cranium and the salt crystalizes on the brain cells. And speaking of cells, how are all your folk? Probably eating across the table from mine.

Can The American Government Endure?

This question will be answered by

JUDGE RUTHERFORD

(in person) over a special Texas to the Atlantic chain of radio stations.

Try these, Wheeling WWVA, Richmond, Va., WRVA, Charlotte, N. C., WBT

Sunday Morning, June 26, 9 o'clock Eastern Standard Time

Speaking of the time immediately preceding the destruction of modern "Christendom" the Bible declares that 'men's hearts would fail them for fear and for apprehension because of those things which they see coming on the earth'.---Luke 21:26.

Never before have the people of America had more grounds for such fear than right now. Today, everywhere, distress and perplexity are daily increasing and hope is waning. The questions in every thinking person's mind are: When will the depression end? How long before the millions now out of work can be given jobs? Can the politicians and the big business men stem the tide that grows more ominous as the months pass?

If you have had enough of men's guesses; if you have had your fill of disappointment peering around corners for the prosperity that doesn't come, and you want to hear the truth, then tune in on one of the above stations at the time stated and hear Judge Rutherford, eminent Bible scholar, author and radio lecturer, prove that relief is near! . . . permanent, certain deliverance for the people of all nations.

TOUR WELL WORTH WHILE

All efforts to give the citizens of Pittsburgh on the Tableland tour last week the reception they surely deserved, have been justified a hundredfold if the Tableland Association has succeeded in measuring up to expectations.

And that it did measure up can be interpreted from the words of H. W. Correll, of the Alleghany Tableland Council of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, who said, in writing to I. S. Middaugh, Institute director, expressing his thanks for the cooperation here: "In summing up the trip I can only say, 'we came, we saw, YOU conquered.'"

The outcome of this tour last week will still be felt many years from now, for a conquest of friendship and goodwill is everlasting.

In the opinion of The Republican, both sides won.

JUST HERE AND THERE

Mr. C. E. MacMurray and his lifesaving crew, from the Youghiogheny Hydre-Electric power house at Sines, are deserving of praise for their willingness to go miles at an instant's notice to try to save a life. They traveled approximately 40 miles in 46 minutes and worked for three hours in the attempt to revive a drowned girl near Rowlesburg, West Va. Although their efforts were not successful this time, the girl having disappeared beneath the water three hours before, they want it expressly stated to the public that they are ready at all times to assist where necessary.

And then Ray Teets is deserving of some recognition in the attempt, for it wha he who drove the car over the steep and winding highway down through Cheat Canyon.

The Boys' Band, although depleted in numbers last Thursday evening, played with more snap than it has ever had. The spirit was there.

If the reports are true that Edwin Elias will not not return to the Oakland Grammar school next year, then the school has lost a good teacher for its pupils and the boys a good friend and athletic instructor.

* * *

S. H. Wainer, baritone soloist of Elkins, who has just recently come to Oakland, has lost no time in giving his services in whatever way may benefit the community.

Mr. I. S. Middaugh, Mountain Lake Institute director, with the help of the Rotary Club and members of his executive committee and others, was successful in carrying through an interesting program for the Pittsburgh visitors last Thursday and Friday.

We are glad S. D. Brenneman, of the Glades, is out again after an illness. We trust Mrs. Henry W. McComas, Mrs. Henry Lauer and Mr. W. Porter Welch may continue to improve. And we regret to note that our old time friend U. S. Frazee, at Selbysport, has been stricken.

Grover Stemple, without making any great stir about it, is accomplishing many things for Oakland, never before thought of. He has been instrumental in arranging for broadcasts, for publicity in daily newspapers, and just lately he has secured a promise from the secretary of the navy to bring the Akron over Oakland, if it appears at Fort Necessity. We need more men like Mayor Stemple.

Pittsburgh-Tableland Union

Much has been written of the inclusion of the Allegheny Tableland region in the Pittsburgh metropolitan area as if it were something still to be accomplished.

A party of sixty Pittsburghers who toured the Tableland June 16 and 17 under the auspices of the Tableland Council of the Chamber of Commerce found that the union had been established years ago through the advent of the automobile age—with the construction of the first hard roads directly joining the districts. Formerly, because of more direct railroad communication and lack of good highways, the Tableland had looked upon Baltimore rather than Pittsburgh as its chief market or trading center. But from Baltimore to the east end of the Tabeland the distance is 148 miles, whereas from Pittsburgh to the west end of the region it is only 52 miles, favorable to Pittsburgh by 96 miles.

No great genius was necessary to realize that a people as wide awake as those of the Tableland would set about without delay to make Pittsburgh the focal point of their new highway network. On the other hand, with 125,000 consumers of Pittsburgh products offered to it, Pittsburgh needed no urging from the Tableland folk that the city and the neighboring territory should get still closer together in a social and cultural as well as a business sense.

That is simply what the ceremonies now are all about; they are but recognition of a close relationship that has long existed and an impetus to deepening and expanding it. The machinery of this is the Allegheny Tableland Association and the Tableland Council of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce. Presently there is to be established a Pittsburgh agent for Pittsburgh products. The Tableland Association, of course, is much more than simply a contact agency between Pittsburgh and the Tableland area, which includes sections of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Maryland; it also is developing regional consciousness and promoting co-operative handling of tableland products.

So much for the basic structure and its purposes. Beyond these and the ordinary trade opportunities, the Tableland affords Pittsburghers exceptional recreational facilities—right at their door. The mountain ranges, beautiful valleys, lakes, rivers and creeks (well stocked with game fish) present scenery that causes the region to be described as "the Switzerland of America." The Tableland folk themselves are of the finest quality and noted for their hospitality. For years a number of Pittsburghers have been spending their vacations in the Tableland, and it is certain that after this Chamber of Commerce tour an ever-increasing number will do so.

Every Pittsburgher owes it to himself or herself to visit this beautiful mountain and agricultural region and help to promote the fine and profitable relationship that is now firmly established.—Pittsburgh Post Gazette.

HOOVER AND CURTIS

The Republican convention ended in a spirit of unity and enthusiasm, and it is the end that counts. It had gone through a succession of wrangling and dramatic debate, one of the most tense and outspoken in the history of the party. It had been baptized in fire and the extraordinary demonstration for Mr. Hoover upon his nomination represented far more than the conventional hoop-la of political gatherings.

It was a tribute to an able President, renominated by his party upon the merit of his record. We have written several times in recent months upon the return of sentiment to the President. The tide has been unmistakable. Chiefly his own achievements, his staunchness in every national crisis, the swift organization of defense against each attack upon the country's credit, his steady upholding of sound finance, all these have gained increasing hold upon the public imagination.

His quiet courage has stood out strikingly against the confusion of his opponents in Congress. Each test has left him stronger, his critics weaker. What swept over the convention at Chicago, we think was a realization of these facts. Mr. Hoover's march to ascendancy has been no easy or sudden step. He has faced the most difficult period which has confronted an American President in generations and he has fought his way through it arduously, faithfully. The delegates at Chicago forgot their quarrels when they recalled their candidate. It was a personal tribute rare enough in the history of political gatherings, says the New York Herald-Tribune, adding:

We think Republicans generally will approve the renomination of Vice-President Curtis. His age means little when considered alongside his vigorous health. He has made an admirable presiding officer of the Senate and his staunch Republicanism and his loyalty to the Administration are beyond question.

Fortunately for Mr. Hoover's prospects, the strength or weakness of the Chicago platform can have little bearing on his campaign. He is his own platform. His record speaks for itself without ambiguity. Where the platform tersely enunciates policies which the President has already expressed in swift, devisive action, it is eloquent and effective. We quote the first five points of its conclusion, by way of illustration:

"Generally on economic matters we pledge the Republican party:

"1. To maintain unimpaired the national credit.

"2. To defend and preserve a sound currency and an honest dollar.

"3. To stand steadfastly by the principle of a balanced budget.

"4. To devote ourselves fearlessly and unremittingly to the task of eliminating abuses and extravagance and of drastically cutting the cost of government so as to reduce the heavy burdens of taxation.

"5. To use all available means consistent with sound nancial and economic principles to promote an expansion of credit to stimulate business and relieve unemployment."

Here is the program that the country needs, and the record shows that Mr. Hoover is the man to maintain and execute these policies. With equal force, the Democrats in Congress have done their best to demonstrate that their sis not the party to be intrusted with the grave problems of the nation at a time like the present.

We congratulate the Chicago convention upon its demonstration of Republican solidarity in the face of a difficult and disruptive issue. We congratulate it not the less upon its candidates and upon its spirit of enthusiastic loyalty to them.

POOR OLD DAD!

It's Dad that writes the checks for Mother's Day celebrations and all other celebrations, too. On the first of the month he is the most important member of the household. But the fact is generally forgotten on the second.

Why not hand him a flower, sometimes, along with the "please remit"? The idea is suggested by the Rev. W. W. Rose, of the First Universalist Church, Lynn, Massachusetts. It is chiefly the father's fault, writes Mr. Rose in his church paper, that he is lost in the shuffle:

"He is content to stand in the background.

"He is inclined to be silent.

"We take him for granted in human society, even as we take salt for granted in the daily provender. And like salt he savors the whole.

"Father works at the commonplace task of earning a living, supporting a family, discharging his duties, laboring along quietly six days in the week, standing between his dependents and the world.

"He shoulders responsibility of rent and taxes.

"He works himself to death that his wife and children may be assured of comfort and independence.

"He is not often the pathfinder or dreamer.

"He is not often the pathnder or the pioneer; nor the rebel.

"He belongs with the hundreds of thousands who dare not revolt—at least publicly.

"He has given hostages to fortune, as Frances Bacon once said. He knows it. But he doesn't care.

"Sometime we may have a national Memorial Day to Dad. That is, if we can get sufficiently wrought up over him.

"In the meanwhile every day is his day. And he spends it working for the wife and kids.

"Give dad a cheer, ladies, but let him pick out his own neckties!"

A SAFE FOURTH OF JULY—

This year most of the nation will celebrate the Fourth of July with a three-day holiday. Such a long period for recreation is awaited eagerly, yet its unusual length doubles the hazards and danger to which all will be exposed.

Independence Day is known as the worst accident day of the year. This year may break the tragic record unless everyone guards himself closely and observes all safety rules. A list of "don't's" has been prepared by the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters and follows:

If you drive your car—Drive Safely:

1. Don't drive recklessly—it's a long holiday and there's plenty of time.

2. Don't take out your car unless it is in first-class condition.

3. Don't drive on the wrong side of the road—keep to the right.

4. Don't drive too long without resting—mental lapses due to fatigue causes accidents.

5. Don't pass other cars unless you have a clear view ahead; don't cut in and out of traffic lines; don't pass or fail to slow down at intersections.

If you go swimming—Swim Safely:

1. Don't attempt marathon races by swimming too long or too far.

2. Don't venture out into too deep water if you're not a strong swimmer.

3. Don't swim away from the crowd —"In unity there is strength."

4. Don't Indulge in ducking others or in frightening weak swimmers or children.

If you celebrate with fireworks—Celebrate Safely:

1. Don't hold lighted firecrackers in your hand or throw them close to others.

2. Don't explode firecrackers near combustible materials.

3. Don't celebrate with guns loaded with real cartridges or shot; firecrackers and toy cap pistols are dangerous enough.

4. Don't fail to treat injuries, even the most minor ones, immediately and intelligently. Tetanus poisoning works slowly but surely.

5. Don't get too close to a display of fireworks—premature explosions occur.

THE SMALL TOWN

Be thankful that you live in a small town or rural fastness. For there, at least, you escape most of the additional burdens and irritations which go with current metropolitan despondency. For one thing, country residents have—or should have—enough to eat, which is more than can be said for many of the urban unemployed. Also, crime and corruption and inefficiency and double dealing have seldom been more rife than in our metropolitan areas today. New York officialdom's inexhaustible "black boxes" and Chicago's unpaid schoolteachers are passing examples! Then, too, a great city has become a place where big folks think it smart to buy gallons from little half-pintsized bootleggers. America needs more "hick towns" where people can have a good time without having to take asperin the day afterwards. Nor do we have to remind you how the depression has knocked the halos of metropolitan business leaders into cocked hats. It is a strange prank of fate that high hats are now being bruised and battered by the very economic turmoil which they were able to ignore so long as only the farmers' lids were being dented. Now the nation must look to its backbone—the smalltowner, if you please!—for the strength to emerge from this passive panic. When the administration ceases to put its hope on Pollyannas and its trust in "city slickres" and renews its allegiance to Providence and its duty to the masses, then we will begin to see the way out of our difficulties, says the Pathfinder, in conclusion.

In 1872 he purchased a cotton plantation near Natchez, Mississippi, which he managed two years. He returned to Maryland and opened a store at Moscow. In 1875 he went to Donville, Ohio, and after the death of his wife in 1876 he resumed the study of law at the University of Virginia. ANOTHER SUMMER OFFICIALLY USHERED IN TUESDAY

Summer was officially ushered in on Tuesday, June 21, and is the longest daylight day of 1932, one and one-half seconds more from sunrise to sunset than Monday was, and two seconds in excess of Wednesday.

Tuesday, however, is not the longest day of the year, as calculated by astronomy. December 22, measured from noon to noon, is more than twenty-four hours long, the excess being 30 and two-hundredths seconds.

C. C. Wylie, associate professor of astronomy, University of Iowa, explains it thus:

"Because we have Mean time rather than Apparent time, sun noon is later from day to day by about 20 seconds near the date of the winter solstice. In mid-November, for those living near a standard meridian, sun noon occurs about 16 minutes before 12 o'clock, while in February it occure about 14 minutes after 12.

"When sun noon is falling later from day to day by a clock running on mean or average time, the length of day defined as the longest day this year is December 22."

Anyway, summer is here again.

Girl Drowns Near Rowlesburg; Youghiogheny Inhalator Crew Is Called to Scene

Stricken with a heart attack and suffering from exhaustion, Dorothy Ayersman, 15, Rowlesburg, West Va., drowned in Cheat River, west of the covered bridge below Dawson's Camp, Monday afternoon, and her sister Ethel, 23, and her father, Parker Ayersman, narrowly escaped a similar fate attempting to rescue her. Her body was recovered within an hour, but two rescue crews, working for three hours, were unsuccessful in their efforts to revive the victim.

One rescue crew was that of the Youghiogheny Hydro-Electric Company. A call for assistance to the City Hall at Oakland about three o'clock was relayed to the power house of the electric company at Sines where an inhalator is kept, and within 45 minutes after they had received the message the crew had traveled the 40 miles from the power house at Sines to Dean's Camp along Cheat where the tragedy occurred. The rescue party with the inhalator was composed of George Wahl, Fred. Gearheart, Peder Baasland and C. E. MacMurray, superintendent of the power company.

The inhalator, in addition to being used in reviving drowning victims, is also brought into play in case of gas asphyxiation and in carbon monoxide poisoning, and with the crew of operatives is at the disposal of the public at any time it is required, according to Mr. MacMurray.

The second rescue erew was from the cement plant at Manheim, west of Rowlesburg.

SUMMER VEGETABLES

Carrots and Beans au Gratin

Three cups canned green beans, 3 cups cooked carrots, sliced, 1 small onion, minced, 5 tablespoons buter, 3 tablespoons flour, ¾ c. soft bread crumbs, 2½ cups milk, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 cup grated yellow cheese, 2 eggs, slightly beaten. Melt half of the butter in a saucepan and simmer the onion until tender. Don't let it brown. Add the flour and stir until smooth and then stir in the milk, salt and cheese. Cook slowly, stirring constantly, until thickened; pour over the beaten eggs and without further cooking, pour over the beans and carrots arranged in alternate layers on a buttered baking dish. Top with the bread crumbs mixed with the remainder of the butter and bake in a moderate oven 350 degrees about 20 minutes.

Asparagus en Casserole

One can asparagus, 2 cups cracker crumbs, 2 cups milk, 1 pound yellow cheese, 2 tablespoons butter, ½ teaspoon salt. Cut the asparagus in small pieces with the kitchen scissors and put it into a buttered baking dish in alternate layers with the cracker crumbs. Dot butter over the top, add grated cheese and pour milk over all. Bake about 30 minutes in a moderate over—300 degrees. One or two eggs beaten into the milk would make this dish even more nutritious.

Carrot and Raisin Pudding

One cup canned carrots, 1 cup milk, ½ cup sugar, 1 egg, well beaten, ¼ cup raisins, ⅛ teaspoon salt. Put the carrots through a sieve and mix with the other ingredients. Bake in a moderate oven for 25 minutes. Serve plain or with whipped cream.

Macaroni and Asparagus au Gratin

One-half package macaroni, 1 can asparagus, ½ cup milk, 2 tablespoons flour, 1 small can mushrooms, 1 teaspoon salt, ½ cup grated cheese, 4 tablespoons butter. Cook the macaroni in plenty of boiling water, rinse in cold water when tender. Arrange in a buttered casscrole in alternate layers with asparagus and mushrooms and pour over a sauce made by melting the butter, mixing smooth with the flour and adding the milk and the juice from the asparagus.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

In 1860 the Maryland Bible Society showed the ravages which war always brings to the normal and orderly pursuits of a nation. The previous years reveals a distribution of 20,000 volumes. But in '60, the committee that prepared the report for the current year wrote: "Civil commotions, such as it was our cherished hope could never befall us, rocked the nation to its center, paralyzing trade, withdrawing men's minds from the peaceful avocations of life and filling all with apprehension for the future." The issue of books was greatly curtailed and monied receipts decreased correspondingly.

However, the great Civil War gave the Bible Socicty new and remarkable opportunities. Rev. Thomas Meyers became general agent in 1861, and the report for that year refers to a vigorous rally and measure of prosperity astonishing to those who fail to recognize the hand of Providence in all things. Thus despite war and its inevitable effect upon the spiritual life of the people, the issue of volumes amounted in that year to 18,816. Of course a large part of these were Testaments. To soldiers, 6,050 were given. This military distribution became an absorbing item.

It must not be overlooked that among those who made up the personnel of the Board of Managers of the Maryland Bible Society, every shade of political sentiment was to be found. There were abolitionists and slave owners, advocates of the Union and staunch supporters of the Confederacy. The Old Line State, by its geographical position in the sisterhood of states, naturally became a buffer for sectionalism in all its forms. However, early resolved, with the good feeling and harmony which has always characterized the operations of the Board, which is especially called for in carrying on such an enterprise as a Bible Society, in meeting the obligation devolving upon them as Christians, to ignore the exciting issues of the day, in view of the paramount duty in the spread of the Gospel. The distribution was applied to Marylanders in the field, without reference to the political differences of the day. The Federal Government graciously made such exception in favor of religious matters as enabled the Maryland Bible Society to direct a large supply of Bibles and Portions to Maryland troops in both the Northern and the Southern service. And so thousands of copies of the Word of Life were sent alike to the boys in blue and the boys in gray. What a foreshadowing of that day when swords shall be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks, when nation shall not make war upon nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

In like manner when America heard the call of stricken Europe, and the doughboys gathered from North, East, South and West to fight again for freedom, this time the liberty of nations rather than of an enslaved race, the Maryland Bible Society again heard the call to the colors. Under the fine leadership of Dr. James H. Hyatt, then its Executive Secretary, the Society presented thousands of volumes to our kahki clad troops at Fort McHenry, Fort Meade and other concentration camps.

The Testaments presented bore the inscription: "The Message of President Wilson to Soldiers and Sailors, U. S. Army and Navy, June 6, 1917, sent through the Maryland Bible Society.

The White House, Washington.

"This book speaks both the voice of God and the voice of humanity, for there is told in it the most convincing story of human experience that has ever been written. Take it all in all, and those who heed that story will know that strength and happiness and success are all summed up in the exhortation: 'Fear God and keep His commandments.'"

WALKING TRIP OVER OLD BRADDOCK TRAIL IN HONOR OF WASHINGTON

One of the interesting products of the work of the Maryland Commission for the Celebration of the 200th Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington is the interest aroused thruout the various parts of the State in the places most intimately associated with George Washington.

No part of Maryland can claim a greater portion of Washington's time than Cumberland and the old Braddock Road from that point to Fort Pitt (Pittsburgh), along which Washington, for nearly ten years, spent the greater part of his time during the French and Indian War. His training in overcoming difficulties, cold and hunger, changed orders from headquarters, and a thousand other trials fitted him, as no other schooling could have done, to successfully carry through the Revolution ten years later. No one else could ever have done it.

Maryland can justly say that, while Washington's Body may have been born in Virginia, his Soul was born in Western Maryland.

Between June 21 and July 4, 1932, a body of one hundred enthusiastic men and women will start from Cumberland, Maryland, on a walking expedition over the Washington-Braddock road to Pittsburgh. This will be under the charge of Professor John Kennedy Lacock, of Boston, Massachusetts, a close associate of Professor Albert Bushnell Hart, the official historian of the National Bi-Centennial Commission, who will also accompany the expedition part of the way. Mr. J. Alexis Shriver, Chairman of the Maryland Bi-Centennial Commission, will also be one of the pilgrims on this walking expedition through the State of Maryland portion of the trip.

Already the Boy Scouts and other groups are actively engaged in clearing the path the entire length from Cumberland, Maryland, to Braddock Pa., a distance of 120 miles, for the old National Highway left Braddock's Road at a number of points in order to improve the grades over the Alleghany Mountains, and, while closely, does not actually follow the alignment of what was, first of all, "Nemecolin's Indian Trail," blazed and trod by George Washington under the guidance of Nemecolin and Christopher Gist (a Marylander), on his first trip in 1753 to the Ohio and Fort LeBouef. Braddock's Road was cut out of the forest, twelve feet wide, in 1775 by his army, which progressed at the rate of two miles per day, so slow was the work of cutting the path through the primeval forest. Crossing some of the ranges, the grades were so steep that it was necessary to let down wagons and guns with "block and fall," managed by seamen who accompanied Braddock for the original purpose of navigating boats on the Potomac and on the Ohio.

The party will be under the charge of Phalanx Fraternity Alpha Chapter (Henry Stimmel, secretary), Y. M. C. A., Connellsville, Pennsylvania, and they have arranged for a walk of an average of not more than ten miles per day. The trip will cross over six ranges of the Alleghaney Mountains. A physician and nurse will be included in the party and sleeping accommodations will be arranged at the end of each day's trip, to which point the baggage will be brought forward by automobile from the last night's stop.

The first stop after Cumberland will be Frostburg, Maryland; the second will be at Grantsville, Maryland; and the third day's trip will be from Grantsville to Somerfield, Pa. The next will be to Fort Necessity, where Washington met his first defeat. Fort Necessity has been rebuilt by the State of Pennsylvania and the United States Government, and will be opened with great ceremony on the 4th of July.

The Maryland Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington is arranging not only to mark the road with its standard markers, "GEORGE WASHINGTON TRAVELED THIS ROAD," but also will cooperate in having marked Spindloe's Camp, the first camp beyond Cumberland; Martin's Plantation, the second camp beyond Cumberland; the "Shades of Death," the Small Meadows camp, the fourth beyond Cumberland; the fifth camp near the Little Crossings of the Casselman River near Grantsville, Maryland, and the sixth camp at Oakton, on the Maryland and Pennsylvania line.

The D. A. R., The Society of Colonial Wars and others are taking an immense interest in this work and it promises to be as unique an expedition as has been undertaken as part of the Bi-Centennial Celebration.

In Baltimore, according to government statistics, during the twelve months ending June 21, the price of food stuffs has dropped more than 18 percent.

GRANTSVILLE

Fire Destroys Barn and Contents

A fire of undetermined origin destroyed the well equipped barn on the farm of Gilead Broadwater, immediately south of town, about 4 o'clock last Thursday afternoon.

The fire was discovered by Mrs. Nevin Broadwater and upon investigation it was found that it had its origin in some bales of hay lying on the barn floor. Delay in getting word to town of the fire was occasioned by the absence of a telephone in the home before the arrival of the firemen it had gained much headway. In the meantime Mrs. Broadwater and Mrs. Fred. Folk, who lives nearby, succeeded in removing their automobile from the barn as well as a team of horses and a pony from the stable.

Besides the building and grain and hay in it, a quantity of new machinery which had been stored in the barn the day previous, was destroyed.

The firemen upon their arrival rendered valuable aid by protecting the adjoining buildings and saving them from destruction. The dwelling, as a result of the intense heat, was badly blistered.

Mr. Broadwater had just recently purchased the farm and the barn was exceptionally well equipped and represents a very considerable loss in spite of the fact that it was well insured.

It is understood that plans are being made to rebuild the structure immediately.

Central Closing Exercises

The central closing exercises of the elementary schools of the Grantsville Supervisory Unit were held in the W. O. W. Hall, Wednesday afternoon, June 15, directed by Miss Kate Bannatyne, supervising teacher of this unit.

The program opened by everyone singing "America," which was followed by the invocation by Rev. A. C. Bell. A cantata, "George Washington, the Father of His Country," was rendered by the pupils of the upper grades of the Grantsville school. The same group sang three songs touching upon Washington and his life. An historical play, "Nathan Hale," was presented by the sixth and seventh grades, which was followed by three more patriotic songs.

Diplomas were awarded to the seventh grade graduates of the schools of this unit by Miss Bannatyne and Mr. Mullinix, principal of the local school. The graduates of the Grantsville school are Mary Baker, James Blocher, Evelyn Bowers, Mary Butler, Edna Durst, Willard Durst, Clayton Edwards, DeLeon Fike, Nellie Lewis, Anna Meerbach, Doris Patton, John Robinson, Junior Shearer and Frank Stanton.

A book, "Wild Flowers of the Alleganies," written by Mr. Joseph E. Harned, a product of the Sincell Printing Company of Oakland, presented by the author to the pupil making the best collection of wild flowers gathered in his vicinity, was awarded to Bayard Miller.

The remainder of the program consisted of four songs, sung by the pupils of the Grantsville school, and "America, the Beautiful," by the audience, followed by the benediction by Rev. A. C. Bell.

High School Commencement

The commencement exercises of the Grantsville High School were held in the Lutheran church, Wednesday evening, June 15th. The student body marched to their seats as Miss Holmes played a processional. The Glee Club sang "Spring Is Here With Joy and Song," written by Kountz; the invocation was by Rev. Bell and was followed by Gounod's "Send Out Thy Light," sung by the Glee Club.

Diplomas were presented to eleven graduates by H. A. Loraditch, president of the County Board of Education. The graduates are Mary Bevans, Mildred Bowers, Manning Bowers, Lona Bowser, Lena Custer, Elizabeth Houck, Rose Miller, George Murphy, Olive Vangilder, Ira Yaste and Walter Younkin.

A Balfour medal and a S. A. R. medal were presented for outstanding scholarship, loyalty, and achievement, to Elizabeth Houck and George Murphy, respectively, by Clyde Bender, class of '31. Mr. Harned's book "Wild Flowers of the Alleganies," was awarded to Ruth Orendorf of the sophomore class.

Chamber of Commerce Visitation

The Allegany Tableland Council of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce paid a brief visit to the citizens of Grantsville last Friday morning as they were passing through on a tour of the Tableland Area. A large crowd of citizens had gathered at the National Hotel and a group of business men of the town drove to Keyser's Ridge to meet them and to escort them into Grantsville. When they arrived the children who had part in the maple sugar pageant at Somerset last year, sang their maple sugar song. Harvey Gortner, mayor of the town, made an address of welcome, which was responded to by Dr. Lenhart, of the University of Pittsburgh, and by Mr. Dunn, president of the Council.

The pageant group sang again and moved through the crowd, presenting maple sugar cakes to members of the touring party, while the school sang two songs. The cakes of sugar were made by J. B. Miller, who donated a quantity of special cream maple sugar which was packed in a basket attractively decorated with the combined colors of Maryland and Pittsburgh, and was presented to the officials of the Council by Betty Beachy, who was Queen Maple Heart crowned at the pageant last September. After a time spent in greetings, the crowd drove away as the school sang their school song.

Miss Holmes and Miss Wallace, with the co-operation of the town's business men, made this meeting possible, and the delightful program was planned by these two women.

KEEP MEDICINE CABINET ARTICLES OUT OF REACH

Health Department Advises Labeling of all Acids, Poisons, Etc

"Put a distinguishing mark of some sort on all acids, poisons, antiseptics and other dangerous drugs or compounds that you keep in the house, and put them away out of reach of the children," is the advice of Dr. R. L. Swain, Deputy Food and Drug Commissioner of the State Department of Health, to all housekeepers.

"This precaution," he continued, "will safeguard grown-ups as well as children, but it is particularly needed when young children are around. As a result of their unfailing curiosity and their willingness to try anything, we are constantly hearing of children who have endangered their lives by picking up or tasting this or that drug or medicine or household article that looked attractive to them.

"Household lye is one of the articles that has a peculiar fascination for children. It looks sugary and they think it is sugar. The burns and inflammation of the mouth and throat and digestive tract that result from swallowing even a small quantity of lye are agonizingly painful and so serious that they are likely to end fatally.

"Very few housekeepers realize the hazards they are subjecting their families to when they leave a can of lye, a bottle of concentrated household ammonia or similar household supples on the pantry shelves or in any other place that is easy of access. So many children, and older people, too, have met with serious injuries, through the accidental handling of household supplies of this sort, that twenty-four States—Maryland among them—have enacted laws which require all packages or containers of such supplies, to be clearly labeled in large letters as POISON!

"But no matter how well such containers are labeled, these things are a source of very great danger unless they are kept in a safe place and where the children can not get at them."

MT. LAKE PARK

Pittsburghers Welcomed

A rather careful inquiry reveals that the visit of the representatives of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce last Thursday evening to this community reacted most favorably on all classes of our citizens. "A move in the right direction," is the comment heard on all sides. The natural beauty and advantages of this section of the Tableland area favorably impresses many of our guests, and several voiced their intention of making this the place of their summer vacations.

No doubt, as plans mature and funds become available and interest increases, added efforts will be put forth to tell the story of the mountain top to a wider circle of prospective visitors. With this movement our people should cooperate to the fullest extent. This can not be brought to perfection in a day or a year. We believe it will be of gradual, but permanent, development.

In the effort to rehabilitate Mountain Lake Park so that it may even exceed its heyday prosperity, we might be encouraged by the thought that if 72,000 men and women, with a cash expenditure of over half a million dollars, can be induced to pay hard cash to witness the Sharkey-Schmeling prize fight, as they did on Tuesday evening for half an hour, certainly several thousand persons can be made to see the advantages of a few weeks, or longer, spent in this area, amid bountcous natural beauty and health-giving environments.

There is still enough money in this section for the better things of life, if properly advertised. America is not broke by a long shot.

Success Is Predicted

Mr. Dunn spoke of the vision of such a project as the people of the Tableland and Pittsburgh had undertaken and predicted great success for it if people from both ends continued to push it.

At the conclusion of the meeting samples of maple syrup "Crest 'O The Alleghanies," were presented to the visitors and an inspection made of the displays.

It was generally agreed by leaders of the Chamber of Commerce and representatives of the Allegheny Tableland Association that the proposition of closer business and cultural relationship between Pittsburgh and the tableland region, with a population of 125,000, is no longer in the dream stage, but is now an accomplished fact, with contact organizations set up at both ends and with the regional spirit constantly growing stronger.

Spokesmen for both groups spoke frankiy. Each is looking for substantial as well as sentimental benefits from the relationship.

Reciprocal Benefits Stressed

Pittsburgh is seeking the trade of the 125,000 customers of the Tableland and the latter expects to develop the Pittsburgh markets for their products and also, this being one of the most important features, to furnish recreational facilities for Pittsburghers.

The Tableland, with its mountains, beautiful valleys, large artificial lakes and clear streams, stocked with trout and other game fish, is presented as "the Switzerland of America."

Every member of the Pittsburgh delegation commented upon the enterprise and generally fine spirit shown by the tableland folk, according to news stories appearing in the Pittsburgh Post Gazette, written by William T. Martin, staff writer, who was one of the visitors on the trip.

Reception Most Enthusiastic

"There is not the slightest exaggeration," the Post Gazette states, "in saying that the Pittsburghers were given one of the most enthusiastic receptions they ever received.

After spending the night at Mt. Lake hotel, the visitors were served breakfast from Tableland products, and the journey was continued along Deep Creek Lake to Accident, thence to Grantsville, and from there the Pennsylvania towns accorded them receptions.

Mr. Correll, upon his return to Pittsburgh, wrote Mr. Middaugh, Institute director, thanking the people of this community for their cooperation. Commenting upon the trip he said, "We arrived at Pittsburgh tired but enthusiastically happy. Concerning our trip through your hospitable territory, all I can say is 'we came, we saw, YOU conquered.' Runaway Truck Crashes Into Car on Caddell Mountain Sunday Evening

A runaway truck on Caddell Mountain crashed into the automobile of Prof. Marston, Superintendent of Schools of Morgantown, W. Va., on Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock, injuring Mr. Marston and his three children. The Marston family was returning to Morgantown from a visit in the east when the big truck, enroute from Goldsboro, N. C., to Wheeling, with produce, got out of control and caught fire. Leslie Sasser, the driver, and James Phillips, his companion, jumped for their lives and escaped with minor injuries.

Marston's machine was almost completely demolished when the truck rammed from the rear and turned it over. The superintendent suffered an injured knee, Mrs. Marston was uninjured, and their children, Aian, 6; Rebecca, 7, and Edgar, 9, all suffered cuts and bruises.

After the Marston car had been bowied over the truck continued down the mountain grade and finally ran off the road, wrecked and caught fire. It was reduced with its cargo, valued at several hundred dollars, to a charred mass.

Sasser and Phillips gave themselves up and arranged bond for hearings on whatever charges may be preferred. The driver said he was going down the hill in second gear when a mechanical defect developed, putting the two-ton truck out of his control.

Suit for $10,000 damages against Jefferies and Sons, of Goldsboro, N. C., was started by Mr. Marston. W. S. John, representing Marston, also brought proceedings in Preston county against L. G. Sasser, driver of the truck, and his companion, J. E. Phillips.

Baughman Requests Autoists' Support for Courtesy Week

"No inspection, no restrictions and no requirements—the motorist is urged to take out on the highways that asset which a man prides himself on in connection with his conduct in his own home, in other words, Courtesy."

This, E. Austin Baughman, Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, said is the aim of "Courtesy Week," which will be conducted by his office from July 3 to 9.

"How many times have you heard a man speak of his ability to be the perfect host—the outstanding qualities which are exercised in the home; the ethics that he never violates to the stranger in his house?" the Commissioner said.

"All these are the kinds of things which I wish to urge the motorist to take out on the highways.

"If he would just show some consideration for the fellow motorist that he shows for the friend, guest or stranger in the home, we shall have one hundred per cent good work and shall not even have a fatality over the Fourth."

Public Warned Against Civil Service "Coaching" Lessons

The following statement is made by the United States Civil Service Commission at Washington, D. C.:

The Commission warns the public against paying money for "coaching" courses in preparation for Federal civil service examinations.

Schools which sell such courses under present conditions accept money under false pretenses. A purveyor of civil service courses is now under indictment in Iowa for false representation. It is expected that other such cases of prosecution will follow.

Comparatively few appointments are being made in the Federal civil service. Vacancies which must be filled are filled by the transfer of those in the service or the reinstatements of those who have been in the service, wherever practicable.

It is seldom necessary to announce an examination. In most cases large registers of eligibles exist as a result of examinations held during the past year. When an examination is announced, the applicants are usually hundreds of times in excess of the need.

Money paid for civil service coaching services at this time might almost as well be thrown to the four winds.

FORT NECESSITY PROGRAM EXPECTED TO DRAW MANY

Dedication of George Washington Memorial to be Held Near Uniontown on July 3 and 4

COUNTY GROUPS TO HELP

The program for the dedication of Fort Necessity, on the National Highway, near Uniontown, Pa., will open on Sunday, July 3, at 1:30 p. m., with a choir of 2,000 voices singing under the direction of Miss Sara B. Huff, music director of Mt. Lake Institute.

Numbered among the 2,000 or more singers will be the various groups from Garrett county, including organizations from a number of churches, granges, booster's clubs, and the community choral societies. These organizations have been practicing under Miss Huff's direction for the past several weeks and are familiar with the songs which will be sung at the dedicatory exercises.

Members of the choir are to be in their seats at 1:10. The Hallelujah Chorus comes about 3 o'clock on the program. The singers will receive their badges for identification at the information booth near the Grand Stand which will be marked "music information." Singers are being asked to bring sunshades and cushions. The vesper service will begin Sunday night at 7 o'clock.

False Reports Circulated

A number of false reports have been circulated about the cost of parking, the cost of admission, and other things.

After talking by phone with Miss Huff, at Somerset, Pa., and I. S. Middaugh, at Mt. Lake Park, it was emphatically stated:

That there was no expense whatever to any participant.

That there was a small parking fee for others who cared to park in the allotted area; but that there was plenty of space to park where no fee was charged.

That no admission fee would be charged.

The report had been circulated that admission was $1 to each person, and that $5 would be charged for parking.

The Monday program begins at 1 1 o'clock with a Grand Pageant and Festival, and the chorus will also be used on this day.

Fort Necessity is the scene of the first real battle of George Washington's military career, and it is in connection with the 200th birthday celebration of this American patriot, that the dedication is being held.

For almost a year engineers and workmen have been engaged in reconstructing the fort as nearly as possible in the manner identical with the original structure. The battle field has also been reconstructed. The grounds comprising about 334 acres have been purchased through appropriations by the U. S. Congress, the State Legislature of Pennsylvania and volunteer contributions by the people of Fayette county. Ground-breaking exercises were held last September with over 15,000 people present, and it is estimated that approximately 100,000 will attend the two-day exercises on July 3 and 4.

President Herbert Hoover is listed among the speakers which includes a number of notables.

The U. S. dirigible "Akron" is expected to fly over the battlefield and also a special squadron of Army and Navy planes. The entire program is being broadcast over a nationwide hookup.

CANNING COMPANY BEGAN OPERATIONS ON THURSDAY

Many People Given Employment —Plant to Remain Open Most of Summer

With eighty-five men, women and boys employed, the Mount Airy Canning company's plant at Loch Lynn Heights began operations last Thursday on the early erop of peas. More will be employed later as the later varieties of peas come in, according to J. Howard Reinhardt, local plant manager. The cannery is expecting to remain open for six weeks for the canning of peas.

Eight hundred seventy acres of peas were planted in the county this year, and the crop is expected to yield a fair return. It is estimated that 65,000 or more cases will be canned.

The corn season will follow closely upon the pea season and will provide employment for a large number for an additional period of time which cannot be determined, as the corn has not developed sufficiently to enable an estimate being made as to the yield.

4-H GIRLS WILL CAMP AT HERRINGTON MANOR SITE

To Be In Session July 18 to 23—Miss Emerson to Attend

The program for the week will include those activities which develop the four H's—head, heart, hand and health. Any 4-H club member is eligible to attend.

STATE EXTENSION DAY TO OPEN PARK MEETINGS

Will be Held July 10—Maryland to be Host to Neighbors

Plans for the second song service of Tableland season and the first for Mt. Lake Park are being laid by Mt. Lake Institute, the day to be known as Maryland Extension Service day. It will be held in Bashford Amphitheatre on July 10, beginning at 2:30 p. m.

On that day Maryland will be host to West Virginia and Pennsylvania and the units of the Friends of Music in Maryland will lead the singing.

Survey of Tableland Products

A preliminary survey of what the Alleghany Tableland will have for sale is being made in each county. John H. Carter, local county agent, and Miss Margaret K. Burtis, home demonstration agent, are reporting for Garrett county, and similar surveys have been completed for other counties. These will be sent to Joseph T. Miller, chairman of the Alleghany Tableland council of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, who will formulate a complete report and present it at a special meeting of the council Friday noon.

A collection of fossils has been made by J. A. Enlow, of Mt. Lake Park, and is now on exhibit in the Mt. Lake Institute office, telling a story of pre-historic lake bed existing in this area. It is hoped that this exhibit will be the nucelus around which may be assembled a museum of interesting Tableland historical articles.

A stolen car, a Ford coach, belonging to H. J. Martin, of Tunnelton, W. Va., was found Sunday near Altamont by Corporal Thomas Currie, of the State police.

FINGER PRINTS IDENTIFY HUTTON ALLEGED ROBBER

Man With Name Tattooed on Arm, Had Been Released Recently From Moundsville

CONVICTED OF ROBBERY

The identity and past record of Harley Dawson, a man about 27 years of age, who was shot and killed by John Sereno, 76, of Hutton, on Saturday, June 18, as he attempted to loot Sereno's general store, has been learned by Garrett county authorities, through the assistance of Terrance J. Boylc, Allegany county investigator.

The only clue Garrett county authorities had was a tattooed mark on his arm with the name "Harley Dawson." After keeping the body for five days State's Attorney Walter W. Dawson requested Allegany county State's attorney William A. Huster to assist. Mr. Boyle and Sheriff Hugh A. Hotchkiss came to Oakland and took fingerprints of the dead man.

With the cooperation of Washington authorities Mr. Boyle checked the finger prints and learned that the man was Haryel Dawson, formerly of Wheeling, W. Va. He had been sentenced to ten years in Moundsville prison on a charge of armed robbery, on January 30, 1925. He had been released a few months ago. His number at the prison was 14225. This information was also received by State's Attorney Dawson from Moundsville, stating he was sentenced in Ohio county, W. Va., for ten years and was discharged on July 17, 1931.

After his release he had come to Oakland and had made his home at the residence of Bill Johnson. Johnson, however, claimed he knew nothing regarding his past.

Numerous people identified him as he was being prepared for burial at Bolden's Undertaking parlor, but each clue produced nothing. He was said to be from Rowlesburg, W. Va.; Liverpool, Ohio; Wheeling, W. Va.; Cumberland, and other towns. He was buried on Wednesday, June 22, in the Oakland cemetery.

He has a sister, Mrs. L. C. Michael, of Barnesville, Ohio, who has been notified of his death and burial.

At this meeting Miss Thekla Fundenberg, first president, will be present, and other presidents since that time will also be there. All old members are being asked to participate. A program is being arranged by Mrs. Nanienne Offutt and a committee.

The regular meeting of the Oakland Civic club was held Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Julius B. Littman. Mrs. Charles J. Bolgiano, summer resident of Loch Lynn, gave an address on elub work, its opportunities and its benefits.

Miss Lottie Loar, president of the club, reported that a grandchild of the famous Washington elm tree had been obtained to take the place of the one which was presented to the club last year and which failed to grow. She also stated that the judges in the yard and garden contest would start on their second inspection the second week in July.

The vacant lot at the corner of Second and Oak streets has been made into a flower garden under the direction of Mrs. Owen Treacy. The H. Weber and Sons company donated over 200 plants—petunias, geraniums, and others— and these have all been planted.

VINDEX PARTIES FINED

Alleged trouble over where a fence dividing the property of Tom Platter and Ed. Swauger, of near Bittinger, should remain, has caused a number of warrants to be issued on both sides, charging five people with assault and battery with intent to kill. The hearing will be before W. The last time the fence was tampered with was on Tuesday, when the alleged mix-up occurred. Swauger also stated that the other side produced a gun, and threatened them, which Platter denies.

SCHEDULE OF PRE-SCHOOL CLINICS FOR JULY LISTED

Dr. George E. Clarke, Health Officer, To Be In Charge

Pre-school clinics at various centers of the county during the month of July have been announced by Dr. George E. Clarke, County Health officer.

These clinics are for the purpose of examining children who are about to enter school for the first time. They will be open from 9:00 a. m. to 11:00 a. m., and from 1:00 p. m. to 3:00 p. m.

The examination of school children in the county shows about one-fourth of them to be suffering from enlarged tonsils, decayed teeth or under weight, while many have defective eyesight or hearing, and a few have been found with heart disease or tuberculosis.

Letters are being sent to parents urging them to have their children examined before school. The school law requires that every child entering school must be vaccinated against small pox.

The schedule for the clinics is as follows:

July 11, Accident, 9:00 a. m.; at Grantsville, 1:00 p. m.

July 13, Friendsville, 9:00 a. m.

July 14, Crellin, 9:00 a. m.; Deer Park, 1:00 p. m.

July 18, Kitzmiller, 9:00 a. m.; Vindex, 1:00 p. m.

July 20, Kempton, 9:00 a. m.; Loch Lynn, 1:00 p. m.

July 21, Bloomington, 10:00 a. m.

July 25, Swanton, 9:00 a. m.

July 26, Oakland, 9:00 a. m., at Court House.

A Memorial To A Bad Beginning

FORT NECESSITY, WHERE WASHINGTN BEGAN HIS CAREER WITH DEFEAT

By NEIL H. SWANSON,
(In the Baltimore Sunday Sun)

A young soldier was sent out to do an important job. He failed to do it. Instead, he was surrounded, forced to surrender, misled into confessing he had assassinated an ambassador, and sent home.

With that as a beginning he worked up to be a general, commander-in-chief of the American Army, first President of the United States and foremost hero of his country. On the Fourth of July, the swampy field where George Washington got away to a discouraging start will be dedicated as a national memorial. In the lowest part of the field, overlooked by a circle of hills, the crowds who attend the dedication will see a tight fence of upright logs, inclosing a small plot of ground and a log cabin. That is Fort Necessity, built there by Washington when he was 22, and now restored as nearly as possible to its original appearance.

The log palisades are some ten feet high. The fort which they form is the shape of a box, with one corner squeezed together. Take a shoe box and pinch two sides of it until the corner where they meet is a sharp point, and you will see what Washington's fort looks like now—save that it has no lid,

It was out of the question, of course, to make Fort Necessity on July 4, 1932, look just as it did on July 4, 1754. To do that would require mud knee deep, rain water standing in every boot track, dead horses and the smoke of burning baggage. Instead, visitors to the fort will see neat white paths and precise banks of earth thrown up against the inside of the log walls to simulate the firing step where 300 Virginians and 150 Carolininans stood to fire through the loopholes. The loopholes are there, trim and neat also, and the spiked tops of the palisades are like pencils fresh from a pencil sharpener.

It is Fort Necessity, retailored to meet the needs of a public shrine. The thousands who will visit it in years to come may have a little difficulty in visualizing it as it was when George Washington surrendered it to the French. For the surrender, as well as the fort itself, is being retailored, for reasons which are not so readily apparent.

The battlefield of Great Meadows is to be a memorial not to a man who went doggedly ahead through defeat and disappointment, but—officially, at least—to a man who never knew what defeat was like.

"George Washington never met defeat," Representative Sol Bloom said in an address at the ground-breaking ceremony when the restoration of the fort was begun last fall. Mr. Bloom is associate director of the George Washington Bicentennial Commission. He added, "It is high time we took this battle of Great Meadows out of the shadows of defeat and placed it in the glorious light of thriumph and military success."

Washington himself, it was explained, was wrong when he wrote to his brother after the surrender that he had been "soundly beaten." And both the associate director of the Bicentennial Commission and the published material prepared in connection with the memorial rise to the defense of Washingtons' military "sagacity" in picking out that particular spot for his fort.

"Military engineers," runs the apology, "have criticized Washington for planting his fort there in the open, surrounded by woods on higher ground. He knew his business. He knew the French and Indians fought from behind trees. He knew the range of their muskets. He planted himself where his enemies, in order to hit him, must leave their shelter and be hit themselves. Precisely this happened."

And another apology says: "With rare sagacity he chose the site of his fortification at the only place where he could expect to hold out against an attack made Indian fashion, as the French fought. In a meadow, with no trees for several hundred yards, but with a spring of water for men and beasts, it had certain definite advantages which are obvious, even to this day, although there has not been wanting some military talent which has criticized his choice of a point in the valley with hills rising on either side. Washington knew, better than these, the manner in which his adversary would fight and the type of arms used in that day.

If there is any flaw in this defense of the young colonel's judgment, it may lie in his own report of the battle, published in the South Carolina Gazette of August 22, less than two months after the surrender. For, according to Washington's version, the French didn't have to come out into the open. Describing the later phase of the fight, when the French were closing in around the little fort in the bottom of the valley, this report says:

We continued this unequal fight, with an enemy sheltered behind trees, ourselves without shelter, in trenches full of water, in a settled rain, and the enemy galling us incessantly on all sides from the woods until 8 o'clock at night.

The same description of the fight appears in the Virginia Governor's report to the Lords of Trade, which says that "the French were sheltered all around our camp by trees; from thence they galled our people all the time." And the same report, far from regarding the affair as a victory, adds:

The next morning a party from the French came and took possession of our encampment, and our people marched off with colors flying and beat of drum; but there appeared a fresh party of a hundred Indians to join the French, who galled our people much, and with difficulty were restrained from attacking them; however, they pilfered our people's baggage, and at the beginning of the engagement the French killed all the horses, cattle and live creatures they saw, so that our forces were obliged to carry off the wounded men on their backs to some distance from the place of the engagement, where they left them with a guard; the scarcity of provisions made them make quick marches to get among the inhabitants, which was about sixty miles of bad road.

But whether the battle of Great Meadows was a victory of the defeat that Washington thought it, the place where it happened will shortly become one of the foremost of American patriotic shrines. In Southwestern Pennsylvania and in Western Maryland, it will be a great event. Cumberland, Md., will send a caravan of representatives to attend the dedication, for Cumberland has a special interest in Fort Necessity. It was to Cumberland, then known as Wills Creek, that Washington retreated with his seventy wounded. Cumberland this spring unveiled a tablet on the restored log cabin that served as Washington's headquarters there in the early stages of the Braddock campaign. And it was the death, at Cumberland, of Colonel Fry, that put Washington in supreme command of the Virginia expedition to hold the Forks of the Ohio for the English, and thrust him into the spotlight of history at 22. Because Fort Necessity played so large a part in the campaigns to protect the Maryland frontier from the Indians and to save it from French control, the Governor of Maryland is one of four Governors invited to be guests of honor at the ceremonies on the Fourth of July. The other States that shared in the Great Meadows expedition are Pennsylvania, Virginia and South Carolina; North Carolina and New York might have, but their soldiers never arrived.

Besides the Governors of the four States, there has been planned a great mustering of other prominent folk, and the committee in charge of the dedication says it expects 100,000 visitors to see the little log stockade on July 3 and another hundred thousand on the Fourth. Dr. Albert Bushnell Hart, noted historian, heads the list of speakers. Others are to include Maj.-Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff of the army; Maj.-Gen. Paul B. Malone, of the Third Army Corps Area; Mrs. William Russell Magna, president-general of the Daughters of the American Revolution; Hanford McNider, United States Minister to Canada, and Edward E. Spafford, past national commender of the American Legion.

The crowds that go to the dedication will drive out to Great Meadows along the old National Pike—Highway No. 40. Forty miles west of Frostburg, Md., and ten miles southeast of Uniontown, Pa., they will come to a place where the paved road crosses a high rounded hill. Beside the road they will see a series of stone markers bearing bronze tablets—the tributes of various organizations to the men who fought there. Flanked on either side by these tablets, they will see an old brick house built a century or more ago, and now turned into a museum as an adjunct to the Great Meadows memorial.

Behind the house, the hill drops away rapidly to a swampy valley. Across the valley other hills rise in a semi-circle. Down in the bottom of the cup of the hills is Fort Necessity.

Sitting in their cars at the roadside, or standing on the hills, the visitors will be able to look right down into the restored fort. Many of them will probably have a feeling that an enemy, preparing to attack that fort, had a grandstand seat from which he could see everything that went on inside the stockade. They may even feel that a garrison inside that fort must have had all the privacy of a fly on a window pane. The French army must have been able to see every movement.

For on July 3, a hundred and eighty-eight years ago, the French and their Indian allies were swarming on the hills overlooking the stockade. Inside it were a Virginia boy of 22, in regimentals he had bought and paid for himself; some 300 Virginia provincial volunteers in hunting shirts, and 150 South Carolinians similarly uniformed.

The Virginia boy was not altogether happy. He had been sent out with an expedition ordered to support one Captain Trent, who was building a fort at the forks of the Ohio to keep out the French. He had been led to expect artillery, and had spent months at the painful work of cutting a road through the wilderness so the guns could come up. And he had been led to expect heavy reinforcements. But the guns hadn't come, and the only reinforcements were the South Carolinians, under a captain who wouldn't take orders from the Virginia boy, and who wouldn't help build roads. And long before the expedition got to the Forks of the Ohio, it was discovered that the French had got there first, kicked out the English advance guard and started eastward looking for trouble. The young Virginia lieutenant-colonel had to turn back before he got within striking distance of his objective.

Instead of holding the Forks of the Ohio for his king, Washington found himself, on the morning of July 3, penned up in his valley, with 900 or more Frenchmen and a horde of Indians around him.

To reconstruct the scene in the valley—so different from the scene that will be enacted there at the coming celebration—seems to make Gen. George Washington much more of a human being than just an orator's hero. It is possible to reconstruct it from his own words and those of Governor Dinwiddie, to whom he reported after it was all over, and from the account in the South Carolina Gazette. Reconstructing it so, one gets the feeling that perhaps Washington was a military man of precocious sagacity, winning a great military triumph, but that certainly he was a young fellow who found himself in a peck of trouble. Some people may even like the young fellow in trouble better than the military genius who "was never defeated."

July 3 was a gloomy day for the young fellow who had had to turn around and come back with his job undone and now impossible to do. It was raining. The fort, like that box without either a cover or a bottom, was open at the top to the weather and to the eyes of the enemy, and open below to the swamp soil soggy with rain. Powder dampened, and the wind whisked it out of the priming pans of the firelocks.

All morning, drenched and apprehensive, the Virginia shirtmen toiled with shovels and mattocks at a makeshift trench in the bottomland. As fast as they dug, the water ran in, until they stood kneedeep. Before they had the trench finished, a musket shot sounded from the sodden woods and a sentry came pelting toward the fort. The French regulars were coming.

But they didn't come far enough. The young fellow in command at Fort Necessity had picked his battlefield as "a charming place for an encounter," and now that the battle had arrived, the French insisted on ignoring the open meadow and crackin gaway at the mud trench and the log fence from the shelter of the woods. They took pot shots at the pack horses and the officers' horses, hobbled in the meadow, and killed them. They killed the cows and even shot down the dogs. As the fight went on, between the French and Indians hiding in the edge of the woods, and the colonials plastered in the muck of the valley, they killed thirty of the men of the garrison, and wounded seventy of them. Some of Washington's biographers of the modern debunking school speak flippantly of the battle as "desultory skirmishing." It might have seemed less desultory to them if they had been there. A fight in which a hundred men, out of less than 450, are picked off by a concealed enemy surrounding them, doesn't seem particularly desultory to the men who are doing the fighting.

It rained all day. And all day the fire from the hills and woods kept up. Men soaked to the skin crouched in the mud, rested musket barrels on parapets that sunk under their weight and fired at the dull flashes of the guns along the forest walls. Wounded men lay in the ooze with the rain beating down on them.

Night came early, in the rain and mist. At 8 o'clock the French proposed a parley. The young fellow commanding the mud wallow of a fort was not at all happy about it; he felt sure that the French merely wanted to get a man inside his palisades to see how bad things were in the fort; he refused to negotiate. The French tried it again, and again the stubborn youngster turned them down. Long after dark, at their third proposal, he sent one Captain Van Braam into the French lines.

Near midnight, Van Braam came back with the enemy's terms for the surrender of Fort Necessity.

"It rained so hard," said Adam Stephen, one of Washington's officers, "that he could not give us a written translation of them; we could scarcely keep the candle lighted to read them by."

Midnight. Pouring rain. Thirty dead men lying in the mud. Seventy wounded lying with them. Surrounded. It didn't seem much like a victory to the young fellow who listened to Van Braam's stumbling translation. He signed the articles, agreeing to give up the fort, and giving him the poor comfort of marching out with his drums beating.

The account printed in the South Carolina Gazette says it was agreed that "each side should retire without molestation, they back to their fort at Monongahela and wet Wills Creek." The fifth article of the agreement as signed, however, saying that at daybreak the next day—the Fourth of July—a detachment of the French should take possession of Fort Necessity.

When morning came the garrison marched out. The drums were beating and the flag was flying at the head of the bedraggled column. Some of the wounded walked; some rode pick-a-back on the shoulders of shirted riflemen; others hung limp and moaning on their comrades' backs. The retreating garrison carried barely sufficient to eat; with the wounded to carry, even food had to be abandoned. Precious powder, transported toilsomely over the mountains, was destroyed; so was the private baggage burned. Even a flag, too heavy to be added to the burdens of the men, was left behind.

As the Virginians and Carolinians marched out, Indians swarmed around them and poured into the fort. Washington wrote, later, that the Indians pillaged the baggage. It is to be doubted that the young colonel from Virginia, leading his drenched, muddy column by hasty marches back to Cumberland, thought of that Fourth of July as a day to celebrate. And a few months later, amazed and furious, he was writing letters to defend himself against the charge that he not only had assassinated a French Ambassador on a peaceful mission, but that he had signed a confession.

That strange episode of Washington's career is better known than the nature of the fight at Fort Necessity. The articles that Van Braam had translated in the driving rain at midnight in Fort Necessity had described the death of one Sieur de Jumonville, in an engagement with a detachment led by Washington, as an assassination. The French said Jumonville was bearing a notice to the English to quit the country; Washington indignantly declared that Jumonville and his men acted more like the advance guard of an army than a diplomatic mission, and he and his officers insisted that Van Braam, in his translation, never used the word "assassin" or "assassination," though it occurs twice in the French text that Washington signed.

The young fellow smarted under the charge. A bitter anti-climax to the fight at Great Meadows. It is even conceivable that the combination of circumstances—retreat, surrender and the unwitting confession of assassination, might have wrecked the career of many another young man. Looked at from the viewpoint of twenty-two years, it was a discouraging beginning.

It leaves one wondering whether George Washington, as a young fellow who got into a peck of trouble but kept right on going ahead, would't be just as inspiring to the future generations who visit Fort Necessity as he will be in the role of the sagacious man who was "triumphant and successful . . always."

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

"My hero!" cried my wife on Monday night, and for no small reason, either, for I was successful in running a mouse ragged, bottling him up in a corner and successfully poking him a good one with a new silk umbrella, the first time in history I have ever been able to accomplish such a feat.

It being in the presence of the better half the victory was all the more complete. Ever since the last camping trip, when I thought I heard prowlers and cuddled up closer (although they were only horses) I half believe she thought I was just a big sissy, with no backbone. But now, thank heavens, I can hold my head high once more.

And I'll have to give her credit for not letting her emotions get the best of her. After the conquerer had committed the murder and held it up by the tail (fingers covered with paper) she didn't say, "Now don't hurt the poor thing," but was entirely content to let me throw it outside in the rain and give it a ducking, just for good measure.

And is she proud of me now!

Archibaldson, the big Clarissa, hides his face under the covers when the mere name of mouse is mentioned. A cold chill is brought on if he really sees one.

Another accomplishment for the week—Getting up at 5:15 a. m. at Jackson's Mill, W. Va., without the aid of an alarm clock and getting my feet under the typewriter at 8 o'clock just so I could get this column out on time.

"Look here," we were greeted over the telephone last Thursday morning, "I didn't get my Republican paper yesterday and you've got to do something about it. I just can't get along without it."

And when we informed the excellent lady she was a day ahead of herself and that it was impossible to furnish even President Hoover with a copy of The Republican before it had been printed, did she turn red and get fussed!

But that's the way we want people to look for The Republican.

"Rotary officers will be induced into office," says Editor Willie of the Democrat last week. Is persuasion needed?

And then in The Republican after all the hard labor I expended in looking up the term "jugular vein," didn't the operator and proof reader let it go in as "juglar." Probably thought he had been a circus acrobat before he took up the business of a night traveler.

Did you ever know it to fail—if the sign said "wet paint," to feel it anyway? If there was a board across the porch to push it aside and plant a number 10 shoe right in the middle of it all?

Last week at Archibald's house a screen door blocked by a kitchen table with things piled on the table didn't stop two delivery boys from ploughing right through. They left something to remember them by.

Johnny McIntire, Don Lohr, Eddie Michael, Little Doc Broadwater and Skipper Louie Jones are still a little red around the gills from last Friday's performance at the high school.

Being right up by the stage, they didn't relish the demonstration of the Crellin home hygiene class on how to care for babies (even if the baby was only a doll) and just before the last garment fell preparatory to putting the "baby" in the tub, they fled from the scene. And they had another number on the program. Maybe it was the bathtub that embarrassed them.

Will the chap who "milked" the boss editor's gasoline tank last Friday night or Saturday morning, please return the cap?

Ditto from Frank Smouse on Sunday night.

Tuesday afternoon a woman came into the office and paid us 45 perfectly good cents to put an ad in the paper. She and her husband wanted to get work on a farm, or get a farm on the shares. Ten minutes later she was back and said she had secured the place. It certainly pays to advertise in The Republican for quick results.

Picnic Menu

Cold sliced corn beef or meat loaf sandwiches, (lettuce, and soft rolls or bread and butter) potato salad with onion and diced cucumber for crispness and seasoning, fresh pineapple or bananas or berries, cookies or cup cakes, coffee (adults), milk (children).

Beef Loaf

Two pounds lean beef, 1 cup diced salt pork (½ lb.), 4 tablespoons flour, 1½ cups milk, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, 1 cup chopped persley, ¼ cup chopped onion, 1 cup fine, dry bread crumbs, 2 teaspoons salt.

Put the meat through a grinder. Fry the diced salt pork until light brown and crisp and remove the pieces from the pan. Make a sauce of the flour, milk, and 3 tablespoons of the pork drippings. Cook the parsley and onion for a few minutes in the rest of the pork drippings, and add to this the bread crumbs and seasonings. Combine all the ingredients and use the hands to mix thoroughly. The mixture will have a sticky consistency. Lay a piece of parchment paper on a rack in an open roasting pan. Mold the meat loaf on the paper with the hands. Bake the loaf in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for 1¼ hours. Do not cover the pan and do not add water. Much better results are obtained by making the meat loaf in this way than by packing it into a deep pan and baking it like a loaf of bread. Remove the meat from the paper and serve hot, or chill it and serve in thin slices.

Sandwich Fillings

Chop hard-cooked eggs, and mix with minced crisp fried bacon and enough salad dressing to moisten.

Wash prunes, dates, raisins, or dried figs or apricots, chop fine, mix with about twice as much cream or cottage cheese, add salt to scason, and chopped nuts if desired.

Mix cream or cottage chcese with chow-chow, chili sauce, or chopped dill pickle, green or ripe olives, celery, green pepper, parsley, watercress, onion, or other salad vegetable, or with chopped nuts, and add salt to season.

Grind shelled roasted peanuts medium fine, mix with enough cream to moisten, and add salt to scason. This is particularly good as a filling for graham or whole wheat bread.

To one-half cup cold Boston-baked beans, add 2 tablespoons chili sauce, mash, mix to a smooth paste, and spread between slices of brown bread.

U. S. FRAZEE

U. S. Frazee, aged 81 years, 10 months and 23 days, died Sunday morning at 9 a. m., following a paralytic stroke more than a week ago.

DANGER LURKS IN USE OF TOY PISTOLS; TORPEDOES

Firecrackers And Other Explosives May Cause Lockjaw

Calling attention to the danger that lurks in the use of toy pistols, firecrackers, torpedoes and other explosives, Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the State Department of Health, says "Have the best time ever in celebrating Independence Day, but show your patriotism in some other way than by shooting off blank cartridges or sending off other explosives. There are plenty of other ways of celebrating the national holiday. They may not be as noisy, but they are both safer and saner.

"Hospitals and health officers dread Fourth of July accidents from fire works and other explosives because of the danger of lockjaw that is associated with them. Accidents of this sort usually result in deep seated wounds in which particles of dirt are crushed into the flesh along with the wadding carrying the gunpowder. The germs that cause lockjaw—or, tetanus, to give the disease its scientific name—are practically always present in dirt, street dirt and stable dirt, and unless very prompt action is taken—sometimes even when it is taken—lockjaw may develop.

"A person who has an injury of this sort, no matter how it is causcd—should get to a doctor as quickly as possible to have the wound treated and so that the doctor may administer tetanus antitoxin to prevent lockjaw from developing. The tetanus germs develop very quickly in a closed wound, so it is of the utmost importance that the wound be thoroughly opened, surgicall cleansed and cared for, and kept open. The preventive dose of tetanus antitoxin should be administered immediately. Don't wait until symptoms develop—by that time it may be too late.

"Tetanus antitoxin for the prevention of lockjaw is supplied free of charge to physicians in the counties by the State Department of Health, through the County Health Officers. The larger quantities necessary for the treatment of advanced cases are furnished at cost."

COUNTY AGENT'S COLUMN

Resident County Agent,

How to Control Mexican Bean Beetle

A large number of inquiries continue to come into the Extension office in regard to the control of the Mexican bean beetle. The beetle can be controlled economically and effectively if the proper materials are applied at the right time and to the under side of the leaves where the insects are feedlng.

Upon arriving in a planting of beans the adults feed for about ten days and then lay orange-yellow eggs in clusters of 40 to 60 on the under slde of the leaves. The larvae feed on the under surfaces of the bean leaves. Between two and three generations occur annually in Maryland.

Time to Apply

Begin spraying or dusting operations as soon as the adult beetles appear on the beans ln considerable numbers and repeat the applicatlons at intervals of 7 to 10 days untll the pods have formed. Do not apply arsenical sprays or dusts to snap beans after the pods have formed.

What To Use

In general, liquid sprays have given better control than dusts, due largely to their better stickling qualities and the ease wlth whlch the polson can be placed on the under surfaces of the leaves.

For Spraying

Magnesium arsenate, 4 tablespoons, water, 3 gallons.

Magneslum arsenate ls a white powder that will mlx readily with water. Apply to the under surfaces of the leaves with a compressed air sprayer equipped with an extension rod and an angle nozzle. Shake freqently while spraying to prevent the megnesium arsenate from settling out of the water.

For Dusting

Copper-arsenical-lime dust 20-20-60 or 15-15-70 formula (Monohydrated copper, surfate, calcium arsenate and hydrated lime). This dust should be purchased ready mixed and applied in dry form to the under surfaces of the leaves with a hand duster. Insist on the proper dust, and freshly mixed.

For Large Plantings

Use magnesium arsenate 2 pounds to each 100 gallons of water applied with a power or traction sprayer equipped with a special Mexican bean beetle nozzle hook-up. Apply 90 to 100 gallons of spray to the acre. For dusting, use 20-20-60 or 15-15-70 copper-arsenical-lime dust at the rate of 15 to 20 pounds per acre. Apply with a traction of power duster.

CAUTION—The above insecticides are poisonous and should be handled carefully.

Cultural Methods of Control

In addition to the above control measures it is always advisable to destroy the bean vines immediately after the last picking of beans either by burning or plowing them under deeply to kill the adults and immature stages that would migrate to later plantings. In fact, organized community or county efforts in spraying and cleaning up crop remnants after harvest will yield most gratifying results toward the elimination of the Mexican bean beetle menace from areas where the plan is followed out.

MAURICE SPELLMAN had reached the stage where everything he did was important.

A certain movement of his circulated rumors in Wall Street.

International banking interests watched him.

A real estate buy of his in a given district started fluctuations upward in that vicinity.

The position of his box at the opera made adjacent ones especially desirable to their owners.

A special body of town coupe became popular because he chose it originally for his own use.

When he decided to dispose of his thirty-eight-room Fifth avenue house and build himself a thirty-room house in a section of New York hitherto undistinguished, it became quite the esoteric thing to live there. Many Fifth avenue mansions were subsequently deserted for the East River district made suddenly important and desirable by the presence of W. Maurice Spellman.

What actually prompted Spellman to the move, however, was not a desire to create a new social colony. On the contrary, it was something diametrically opposed to that.

There had been growing within Spellman, as his success mounted and as at forty-six he found himself a power among men, a sense of a need of respite from the growing demands of his position.

Success had not come to Spellman without grim battle.

For thirty of his forty-six years he had fought for it rung by rung. From the lean days when he lived with his parents and seven brother and sisters in an old water-front tenement, to his days of newspaper selling along lower Broadway, then on up to the still lean but eager days of his cub reportership, when he shared a walk-up, four-room apartment in Greenwich street with three other fellows, and so on and so on. Through more years of struggle, deprivation, failure, struggle, then failure again and finally the first glimmerings of success. The foray into Wall Street on the slender savings out of two years of newspaper work.

Success. A plunge with the winnings. More success. A clever sideswipe into copper. Twenty thousand dollars profit over night. Then the deluge.

From then on, practically everything Spellman touched turned to gold.

Feature writers had blazoned his story over enough Sunday supplements to pave the way from his new thirty-room home to the tip of Seattle.

Slogans for success were invited from him by the bevy of waiting reporters every time he stepped off a train. His arrival or departure any time or anywhere was a matter of national importance.

All this from the man who fifteen years before had been Bill Spellman, a struggling young reporter who shared a rather dingy down-town flat with three other fellows, two of whom slept on cots in the same room with Bill.

Strangely enough, although in a much less spectacular way, these boys had gone on, too. As if contact with the success-destined personality of Spellman had cast its power over them. Spike Quigley, erstwhile police reporter on the Herald, while Bill had been rewrite man, was now president of a large motor car corporation. Red Dyke, also ex-rewrite man, had recently presented his daughter with a check for fifty-thousand dollars on her wedding day. Even Slow Thompson, special writer for the Town Review, had since come nicely into his own as real estate promoter in the land parcel deals.

The old "Greenwich Guys," as they had been pleased to call themselves, had all come along in the world, so to speak.

Spellman valued those days. Looking back, they sometimes seemed to him to have been the happiest of his life.

They were the days when he had dreamed of writing. Before the mail and the toil had caught him in their clutches and flung him around on the great belt, as it were, of the gigantic wheel called struggle-for-existence.

Bill had been a dreamer back in those days. So had all that particular little nest of fellows. The long, talky evenings over pale red wine and greasy Italian table d'hote dinners in subcellars, dreaming, talking, planning, hoping! And rebelling!

Spellman had been a rebel in those days.

Hating injustice. Crying out against monopolies and against man's inhumanity to man. Spellman had dreamed of writing the great American Comedie Humaine, only, as he outlined it to the Greenwich Guys, as they sat talking on and on into the dream-lit nights, his Comedie Humaine was going to show humanity the grim tragedy, as well.

Oh, Spellman had dreams, all right.

They lit the dinginess of the poky little over-crammed flat.

They lit the days and nights.

They were the dreams of idealism. Of youth with his head in the clouds.

And then the deluge. The deluge of the material success that made of life a cyclorama. A success so blinding, so amazing, that the world clamored for its recipe.

No wonder that under the stress of it, the strain of it, there came the time when Spellman, still in love with success, mind you, felt, however, the need of a retreat from the maddening crowd.

At first his family rebelled. His wife, young, a product of the world he had grown into, held back from that move off the Aveaue. His children, fiery, spoiled, intelligent, creatures of their kind of environment, shied at first and then capitulated to the novelty of the idea.

In the end, the move turned out to be one of the most brilliantly diplomatic things Spellman had ever done. It proved his position in the social world which his wife and children craved. Society came flocking over after Spellman to the hitherto obscure section along the East river. A new and old-world looking boulevard began to take shape over there.

Brilliantly successful as it was, in the eyes of his family, and the realty dealers who profited by the land boom, so far as Spellman was concerned, it was a failure.

He had defeated his own purpose. In seeking to escape the maddening crowd, he had only brought it tagging along with him.

Travel meant no respite to Spellman. There were the ship reporters, the glare of limelight even in obscure foreign parts, and once when he sought the desert, reporters with cameras had found him out as he stalked across the waste place, camel-back.

Spellman wanted leisure now. But his Long Island home was a social rendezvous and his Adirondack camp that same kind of center all over again. New Mexico became the fad, no sooner he had built an abode hut out there, and a private office in the forty sixth story of the Woolworth office building remained private for about two weeks.

Spellman wanted leisure. Spellman want[illegible] to write. The old urge was upon him. The old desire to put into printed, palpitating word the human panorama as it had marched so dramatically before his still young eyes. Spellman wanted mental peace. The quiet kind of hours that yield up dreams.

One day an idea struck him like a benign flash out of heaven.

Within three hours, secret agents had been dispatched down to a rickety little old building in quaint old Greenwich street.

Twelve hours later, the property had secretly passed into the hands of Spellman.

One week later, and with a degree of secrecy that only power and money could command, Spellman walked into almost an extra replica of the dingy old flat of days gone by.

He had even managed to have reproduced the mangy old carpet sofa upon which he had slept those eager nights, away back.

There was the ink spot on the wall left from Red Dyke having good naturedly hurled a bottle of the stuff at Bill one night after an altercation on the subject of Neitsche's philosophy.

The first night that Spellman spent in his new retreat promised to be one of the greatest peace he had known in years. A long quiet evening before the tunnel-shaped little old grate in the dingy flat. Books. Memories. Dreams. Ideals.

But, of course, it was hard to concentrate. By eleven o'clock, a hundred details were crowding into Spellman's mind, making it difficult for him to use his well-earned leisure. There was not telephone. There had been none in the old days. One had to go to the corner drug store. That made it difficult. In the last year, Spellman had developed a slight heart leakage. Unimportant, but he required a certain amount of restraint to his activities. By eleven, Spellman, accustomed to chilled mineral water at his bedside, was thirsty. There was only the hydrant. And no ice in the leaky refrigerator. There had never been any in the old days, unless one of the fellows ran over to Grody's saloon and brought back a nickel's worth. Of course there was no Grody's saloon any more.

When finally Spellman turned in, the magic to the old couch was all gone. The old couch hurt! It shot into his ribs with a cruelty that kept him wide awake and concentrating upon his discomfort rather than any of the old dreams he had used to enjoy, with his eyes staring wide open into the comfortable blackness.

The blackness annoyed him now. He had the sensation that vermin might be crawling around and about him. The stiff blanket irked. The air from the shaft was foul.

At eight o'clock the next morning, Spellman, who had fallen off into a brief hour's sleep, awoke stiff and unrefreshed. A blurred mirror gave back his lined and weary image.

The little old room of his memories was a dirty smear.

The old Bill was gone. Spellman was in his place.

Emerging from the rickety little building that morning, eager for a taxi and a trip uptown to his warm and mellow bath, he found a battalion of reporters and photographers lying in wait for him who leaped into action at sight of him.

"Mr. Spellman, have you anything to say—click—click—click—on the subject of—"

"Yes, fellows, I have," said Mr. Spellman smiling, as he hailed his taxi. "He who would seek for his lost youth, must find it in his heart. There is no going back."

BITTINGER

Some folks complain when it don't rain,
Likewise when days are sunny;
The same ones howl when days are foul—
Now don't you think that's funny?

Rev. Beeghley, of Westernport, is conducting a series of services in the Bethesda chapel, near this village.

Charles H. Buckle and family, of Cumberland, spent last Sunday here, as guests of Mr. and Mrs. O. C. Buckle.

Mrs. C. C. Beachy spent part of last week visiting her husband, who is undergoing treatment in a hospital near Baltimore.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Ellithorp motored over to Centreville, Pa., last Friday to visit Mrs. Ellithorp's sister, Mrs. Jane Boucher, who is ill at her home in that town.

Mr. Jacobs, welfare secretary of the Loysville Orphans' Home, which is maintained by the Lutheran church, delivered an interesting illustrated lecture in the church here on Tuesday evening of last week. Mr. Jacobs was assisted by Mr. Donald Sincell, of Oakland.

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Kamp and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Otto and family, of New Germany, were guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Glotfelty last Sunday.

Rev. David E. Stresser, pastor of the local Lutheran church, motored to his home at Currysville, Pa., early last week, returning to Bittinger last Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. John Hetrick, of Accident, and Mrs. Emma Watson, of Johnstown, Pa., visited this village last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Brenneman and son, of Frostburg, visited relatives here on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Emory are at home to their friends in the Lutheran parsonage in Bittinger, where they will reside temporarily.

The Bittinger baseball team played a game with the Mount Nebo team Sunday afternoon and came home rather crestfallen, bringing the report that they had been beaten by a score of ten to nothing. Better luck next time, boys.

Mrs. Charles H. Wiley, who has been seriously ill for some time, is now said to be recovering slowly.

Lesson for July 3

CHILDHOOD AND EDUCATION OF MOSES

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 2:1-10; Acts 7:20-22.

GOLDEN TEXT—Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Baby Moses.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Slave Boy Rescued by a Princess.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Preparing for Life's Work.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Influence of a Godly Home.

I. Moses' Parentage (v. 1).

Both father and mother were of Levitical stock. Being from the same tribe, they had a common bond of interest and sympathy. Amram had the good judgment to choose for a wife a woman who had sympathies and ambitions in harmony with his own.

II. Moses' Birth (v. 2).

Two children, Aaron and Miriam, were born to Amram and Jochebed before Moses. However, Mosea was the first one that his mother was assured was to be the deliverer of the chosen people. There was something striking about this child which caused her to believe that it was sent of God. She saw that he was a "goodly child." In Stephen's speech (Acts 7:20) he asserts that the child was "exceeding fair." No doubt his mother believed him to be the deliverer of his people and instilled that truth in his mind from childhood. Because of this belief, she had confidence that somehow God would save him from the cruel decree of the king.

III. Moses' Preservation (vv. 3-8).

Though Pharaoh's edict was in force Jochebed's faith was such as to cause her to ignore it and hide Moses for three months. The hiding of the child was not because of fear, but because of faith (Heb. 11:23). It was her faith that made her brave to ignore the king's order. The unfailing antidote for human fear is a vital faith in the living God (Ps. 27:1).

1. Placed in an ark (v. 3). Perhaps the story of how Noah and his family were saved in the ark suggested to his mother the expedient used, namely, the ark of bulrushes.

2. Ark placed in the flags by the river (v. 3). Doubtless she was familiar with the place where Pharaoh's daughter came to bathe. She placed the ark at the particular place where it would attract attention.

3. Miriam watching (v. 4). She was, no doubt, stationed here by her mother. It is interesting to note the steps, as pointed out by another, by which God's plan was carried out:

a. A mother's wit (vv. 3, 4). She devised the ark and placed the baby in it at the proper place and at the opportune time. She also instructed Miriam as to her action.

b. A woman's curiosity (v. 5). The strange object among the flags attracted the attention of Pharaoh's daughter, and she directed her maids to bring it to her.

c. A woman's compassion (v. 6). When the ark was brought and opened, the baby wept. The true woman is always moved with compassion at the cry of a motherless baby.

d. A baby's tears (v. 6). The tears of Moses aroused the womanly instinct of Pharaoh's daughter and she was therefore susceptible to the suggestion as to the care of the baby.

e. A faithful sister (v. 7). Miriam's question was in the form of a suggestion as to a nurse for the baby from among the Hebrew woman. This suggestion met a willing response and Miriam called the child's mother. In this providence of God we see that Jochebed was hired to nurse her own child. The best nurse possible for a child is its own mother.

IV. Moses' Education (vv. 9, 10, cf. Acts 7:20-22).

1. At his mother's knee (v. 9). We thus see his education began at the proper time and at the proper place. It was during this period that his character took form. Here his mind was filled with the Word of God and he was made acquainted with the Jewish hopes and prospects. In these early years, no doubt, the indomitable purpose was fixed, to suffer affliction with the people of God rather than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season (Heb. 11:24-26).

2. Adopted by Pharaoh's daughter (v. 10). At the proper time Moses was brought unto Pharaoh's daughter and adopted as her son. She called him "Moses," which means "drawn out," "because," said she, "I drew him out of the water."

3. Educated in the Egyptian court (v. 10). It was here that he became acquainted with the wisdom of the Egyptians (Acts 7:20-22). This was of great importance. It peculiarly qualified him to be the law giver and the historian of his people.

Small Offenses

A very small offense may be a just cause for great resentment; it is often much less the particular instance which is obnoxious to us, than the proof it carries with it of the general tenor and disposition of the mind from whence it sprung.—Greville.

MT. LAKE PARK

Camp Meeting

Established in 1882, the Mt. Lake Park Camp Meeting celebrates its 50-year jubilee this season. It has a membership of upward of 800, scattered throughout many of the states. Its organization recalls such stalwart Christian gentlemen as Rev. John Thompson, David Updegraf, Dugan Clark, Rev. Joseph Smith and many others who have long since passed to their reward. As we glance through the program we note that Mr. C. M. Hood, who has held the office of president since 1920, Rev. "Andy" Dolbow, who has held the spot light for his unique methods at each session for the past 36 years, J. P. Bohlander, the treasurer, and others of the old guard, will be present this year. We trust that the problems confronting the Board at this session may be satisfactorily settled and that it will not become necessary to change the meeting place of this Association. The meetings will begin July 1 and continue until July 10.

Bureau of Mines, is now in Garrett county for the purpose of training the teams that have been entered by the various coal companies, who are associated in the movement. A course of intensive training is being pursued under his direction in order that a high degree of proficiency may be attained by the day of the meet.

ROOSEVELT IS NOMINATED AT DEMOCRATIC MEETING

John N. Garner Chosen as Vice-Presidential Candidate

Franklin D. Roosevelt, governor of New York, was chosen as the Democratic nominee for the presidency at the Democratic National Convention in Chicago last Friday night on the fourth ballot and John N. Garner, of Texas, speaker of the House of Representatives in Congress, was named as vice-presidential candidate on Saturday evening.

With the force of a real stampede Governor Roosevelt swept through the convention as the favorite sons announced one after another their withdrawal from the race and turned their votes into the swelling Roosevelt column. Albert C. Ritchie, governor of Maryland, was among the candidates to withdraw in favor of the winner.

William G. McAdoo, of California, one-time presidential aspirant, started the Roosevelt stampede by stating that the California delegation he headed had not come to the convention to deadlock it. California was previously pledged to Support Garner.

The official count gave Roosevelt far more than the 770 two-thirds majority required, the tally being: total votes, 1148½, necessary for choice, 766; Roosevelt, 945; Smith, 190½; Baker, 5½; Ritchie, 3½; White, 3; Cox, 1.

Scout Benefit Picture to Raise Money for Camp

"When a Feller Needs a Friend," starring Jackie Cooper and Charles "Chic" Sale, will be the attraction at the Maryland Theatre, Oakland, on Wednesday and Thursday, July 27 and 28, for the benefit of the Oakland Troop of Boy Scouts.

Each year it is necessary to raise over $300 to cover all expenses for the annual encampment along the shores of Deep Creek Lake. Every boy who is able to pay, is required to give $6.00, and the balance of what is needed is raised by the benefit picture, donations from different organizations and in whatever way is possible.

The story of the picture is taken from William Johnston's "Limpy." Jackie is Limpy, barred from the play of the other boys by an iron brace. Jackie's pal is his grand-uncle, Sale, old, boastful, appealing, who makes every possible effort to strengthen the backbone of the lad.

Comedy is inserted with a sure touch, immediately following the heavily dramatic scenes, the burden of which is carried by Sale.

Admission will be 15 and 35 cents.

Pictures to Appear This Sunday in Baltimore Sun

Pictures of Garrett county, including Swallow Falls, Deep Creek Lake, and others, will appear in the photogravure section of the Sunday Sun, accompanied by an article in the magazine section, on Sunday, July 10, according to a representative of that paper.

Honors again were paid the Foundation of Liberty established in 1754 as national and international figures assisted in the didication of the restored Fort Necessity in the mountains, 10 miles east of Uniontown, Pa., on July 3 and 4.

French, British and Canadian governments sent representatives to lend their voices in the history-making events which were attended by 10,000 people on Sunday and 20,000 persons on Monday.

On Sunday a chorus of 1,500 voices, which included all the organizations from Garrett county participating, joined in singing the patriotic hymns, the other selections and the Hallelujah Chorus, all under the direction of Miss Sara B. Huff, music director of the Mt. Lake Institute.

Upon hearing the Hallelujah Chorus Albert Bushnal Hart said it was the highest spiritual experience of his entire life, to stand there and hear the hundreds of voices singing as one voice, "The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth."

Monday was enlivened by bands and drum corps with a pageant in which 1,500 participated at night. A display of fireworks depicted the battle of Fort Necessity.

The British government sent Colonel Fitzmaurice Day. From the French embassy came Major Emanuel E. Lombardo. Canada was represented by Secretary Crowther of the legation of that country. Following addresses by the representatives of the foreign governments their national anthems were played.

Major General Paul B. Malone made a plea against pacifists. Former Governor John S. Fisher outlined the history of the country leading up to the battle of Fort Necessity. Colonel Fitzmaurice Day spoke of the high regard that English officers had always held for General Washington.

Colonel Edward Spafford, former commander of the American Legion, gave a description of the battle of Fort Necessity. Dr. Charles E. Foelscho, of Charleston, S. C., representing Governor Blackwood, paid tribute to the South Carolinians who lost their lives in the defense of Fort Necessity.

Announcement was made that plans are being discussed to have the observance at the fort site an annual event on the Fourth of July.

I. S. Middaugh, director of Mt. Lake Institute, wishes to thank all those who took part in the celebration and asks that they continue their cooperation throughout the summer program at the Park.

Quiet Session of Council Held on Tuesday Evening

The regular monthly meeting of the Mayor and Town council was held Tuesday evening, July 5, in the City hall, with little official business except the passing of the monthly bills, according to Grover C. Stemple, mayor.

It was reported that Pennington street from Wilson to Bartlett street had been completed with the exception of the oiling, which would be done within a few days. No complaints on the reduction of wattage had been received by those in charge of street lighting, Mr. Stemple stated.

The monthly bills amounted to approximately $1,000. The next regular meeting will be held on Monday, August 1.

The Union Leagues will meet in the M. E. church on Sunday evening at 6:30 o'clock. George Altstetter will be the leader and the topic for discussion will be "What shall I do with my life?" All young folks of Oakland are requested to be present at this service. There will be good music, and plenty of opportunity for discussion.

Mrs. Emma E. Chisholm, of Cumberland, suffered painful burns about the body on Tuesday afternoon when her clothing was ignited by flames from an open fire at her home. She is being treated by a Cumberland physician. Mrs. Chisholm is the widow of the late Daniel Chisholm, formerly of Oakland, where he was engaged in the drug business many years ago.

The Akron, U. S. navy dirigible, due to unfavorable weather conditions, did not appear either over Oakland or at Fort Necessity.

Pictures at the Maryland theatre for the remainder of the week will be for the benefit of the American Legion post and the Oakland Volunteer Fire department, under whose joint auspices the celebration is being held.

The Tri-Towns fire company defeated the Oakland baseball team 7 to 3 on the local grounds on Monday afternoon. A double header was scheduled but rain prevented the opener in the morning.

Firemen Called To Rowlesburg Last Saturday Morning

The Oakland Volnteer Fire Department was called to assist in extinguishin ga blaze at Rowlesburg, West Va., early on Saturday morning, but was called back before they reached there as the Rowlesburg company had succeeded in getting the fire under control.

The entire upper story and roof of the Old River House, the oldest building in the town, was destroyed, the fire being of unknown origin. The damage is estimated at $2,000, being partly covered by insurance. It was erected in 1831. The building had been unoccupied for a short time.

Passion Play To Be Shown at Mountain Lake on July 13

Mountain Lake Institute has been able to arrange for the showing of a five-reel motion picture of the Passion Play in the auditorium at the Park on Wednesday evening, July 13, beginning at 7:30 o'clock.

Thousands of people go to Oberammergau, in Bavaria, to see the Passion Play as it is portrayed every ten years. In 1633 the village of Oberammergau was visited by a plague. Upon its cessation the entire populace made a vow to perform the passion play of the Saviour every tenth year out of gratitude and as a means of religious instruction.

The motion picture gives as near an exact reproduction of the play as is possible. Ministers, Sunday school teachers and all others interested in religious instruction are urged to cooperate. The price of admission will be 15 cents and 25 cents.

Mrs. Genevive Stewart, president, and Mrs. John Falnter, secretary, of Hyattsville, officers of the State Firemen's Auxiliary, will be in Oakland at three o'clock tomorrow afternoon to meet the women of town and perfect an auxiliary of the local firemen. All women interested in the organization are invited to be present and assist.

LINE FENCE CONTROVERSY SETTLED; TWO ARE FINED

Sugar Tree Is Divided Among Three Property Owners

The controversy over the line fence which resulted in charges and counter charges of assault with intent to kill, was settled last Friday before Justice W. A. Gonder, of Oakland, when he fined W. E. Swauger and Harry Swauger $1 and costs each and found the others not guilty.

The sugar tree which is said to have started all the trouble, has been designated as the point at which three properties come together, giving the owners each one-third interest.

The three warrants issued at the order of Asa House against W. E. Swauger, Harry Swauger, and Bud Swauger were the first on the docket, but the Swaugers wanted a jury trial. The warrents charging Thomas Platter and Asa House with assault, issued at the order of W. E. Swauger, were next. Justice Gonder found Platter and House not guilty. The attorneys then persuaded the Swaugers to present their cases on the testimony already given, and Justice Gonder fined Harry Swauger and W. E. Swauger and dismissed the charge against Bud Swauger. The costs being heavy, the fine was lightened.

According to an agreement before the parties involved left the Magistrate's office, Platter gets one-third of the sugar tree, W. E. Swauger one-third, and George Heir the remaining third.

240 LOSE LIVES DURING JULY 4TH CELEBRATION

Four Deaths Occur in Maryland —None in Garrett County

America celebrated the 156th anniversary of the birthday of the nation at a cost of more than 240 lives, about half of that of 1931. Only a few of those who died were the victims of fireworks, which caused but ten deaths in all. Automobile accidents were the chief cause, one hundred eleven being killed in motor mishaps. A total of 81 were drowned.

Automobiles and firearms brought death to four persons in the counties of Maryland over the three-day Fourth of July celebration. None of these were in Garrett county although four known wrecks occurred with no serious injuries.

One accident occurred near the home of Paul Mitchell on Monday evening when a car skidded off the road and ran into a barbed wire fence. No one was injured and the car only slightly damaged.

The Whippet car belonging to Joe Maderla, Grafton, turned over at the corner of Third and Green streets on Wednesday morning as he tried to avoid hitting a truck turning in to C. H. Browning's Filling station. The car was damaged considerably but no one was injured.

An automobile crashed into the culvert at Houck's garage corner on Third street and turned over on Monday night. The occupants were badly shaken up but not seriously hurt.

On Chestnut Ridge, east of Grantsville, Tuesday evening, an automobile skidded off the road and turned over.

Much Rainfall Recorded

A total of 5.77 inches of rainfall was recorded for the month of June at the government station a Weber's, south of town. So far during July 2.73 inches of rain has been recorded.

All service men and women who are interested in having the children recorded are requested to send the children's name, date of birth including year, the name and address of the service relative, his date and place of birth, date and place of enlistment, branch of service, any citations, date and place discharged.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

"What I want is a 'Safe and Sane Fourth,'" cried the lady on Monday who had lost her third husband about a year ago and still felt the urge for the double harness.

Colonel Bell was up early Sunday morning, but not quite early enough to get a picture that would have shown to advantage on the front page of the Police Gazette.

The story is that very early Sunday morning Thad Hinebaugh's cow got tired of grazing in the barnyard. Summer was in the air and the spirit of adventure surged thru her veins. Beyond the barnyard lay the Alps (or at least Reservoir Hill), and since Bossie had heard that the Lord alps those who alp themselves, she decided to find "Her Hero." (She keeps up to date on her advertisements).

But one of the prison guards notified Warden Hinebaugh, who forgot that he had nothing on but a few gentlemanly unmentionables, otherwise known as underwear, and proceeded to retrieve his prisoner.

And how was he to know that maiden ladies would be taking a tramp through the meadows at that time of day.

It is rumored since Sunday that Thad has received invitations to join the U. S. Olympic racing team as a dash man.

Even the Cow waa Shocked

Forty Years Ago

Appearing in The Republican Forty Years Ago, it still seems to have quite a "kick" to it:

Little drops of whiskey,
Little jags of gin
Will make a man a Democrat
If persisted in.

"Let me show you how to fire those big skyrockets," said Archibaldson, Sr., to Archie, Jr., 6. "You might burn yourself." But that was before one of them got loose and chased him around the corner of the house.

Just a second Major Hoople, Andy Gump or Rudy Nebb.

A roamer from North Carolina almost hooked me last week-end with a nice story about having work in Baltimore if he just had enough money to get there. There was a slight hitch somewhere and after he had departed I discovered he had told an entirely different story to members of the city council a few minutes before. Another narrow escape on my long list.

Having loaned a cot to Eddie Lanzer which was short at one end, and seeing Babe Tower yesterday made me wonder why beds aren't made in a varlety of shapes and sizes, like people. The average bed will hold most any kind of human, but with a lot of discomfort and waste space.

It always seemed so pathetic when tall people had to stick their feet out beyond the footboard for flies to gambol on while there's a foot or two of unoccupied sides.

And it's an equally sad story that short fat people have to hang over the aides or bring up a chair with a cushion on it to take care of the overflow, when there's a foot or so of unused space at the bottom of the bed.

I advocate adjustable beds. When one spends practically a third of his life there he has a right to be comfortable. I have never been bothered that way myself, but haven't I a right to feel sorry for other people? We might start a campaign, although I doubt if Mayor Stemple would even be lukewarm about the proposition.

The columnist stood at the pearly gate,
His face was worn and old;
He meekly asked of the man of fate
Admission to the fold.

"What have you done?" St. Peter asked,
"To seek admission here?"
"I was a columnist on The Republican
On earth for many a year."
The gate swung open sharply
As Peter touched the bell.
"Come in," he said, "and take a harp;
You've had enough of hell."

And that's enough until next week.

FORTY MARRIAGE PERMITS ARE ISSUED DURING WEEK

Three Day Holiday Is Incentive for Rush at Clerk's Office Here

With a three-day holiday as an incentive, Saturday, July 2, was the busiest day on record at the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court as far as the marriage license bureau was concerned, sixteen licenses being issued on that day. Forty licenses were issued during the week ending Tuesday morning, giving July a start for a new record with twenty-five. The record for July is 132, made in 1929.

One hundred seventeen permits were issued during the month of June, being 31 less than for the same period last year, and 47 less than the all-time record for June. Only three permits were granted on July 4. Nine licenses were marked "don't publish", while two applicants were refused permits.

"Make it Four, Father!"

If you once have a taste of the New NuGrape, you always come back for more. It's just that sort of a flavor—a mysterious something, born of plump Concord grapes and sunshine. There is nothing anywhere near like it, with its bouquet of dew-ripened grapes, and its sparkling, dancing life—as of champagne.

Next to impossible to keep the New NuGrape on ice at home—the family sneaks in for "just another bottle," even when a case is purchased at a time. But since Nature and Science brewed it and brought it to its delightful state of appetizing perfection—you can drink as much as you please as often as you please.

There is no substitute for the New NuGrape. Accept none, for it would only mean disappointment. The genuine is sold everywhere for 5¢.

THURSDAY, JULY 7, 1932.

HE SAW THE POINT—

"Everything else is coming down, Mr. Editor, and we think you should reduce the subscription price of The Republican and fall in line with the others."

That was the comment made by a farmer-subscriber who called at The Republican office the other day to renew his subscription. The fact that this suggestion has not been heard oftener indicates that subscribers to The Republican feel that they are getting their money's worth when they pay less than three cents per week for the visits of this compendium of community, school, church, farm, home and store news.

Here is our answer to the badly-deflated farmer-subscriber, with whom we sympathize deeply:

"Mr. Subscriber, a dozen or fifteen years ago you were paying $1.50 a year for The Republican. Prices on everything else at that time started going up. You had to pay more for a suit of clothes. You had to pay a higher rent. You had to pay more for an acre of land. Your shoes cost you double the old price. You had to pay almost double wages for your help. In fact, everything you bought went up in price. But you continued to pay only $1.50 a year for The Republican.

"Now, if The Republican had jumped its price when everything was going up, we surely ought to reduce it when things are going down. But in a period of inflated prices The Republican did not inflate its subscription rate but kept it at the old price of $1.50 per year. Now, in this period of deflating prices, we have nothing to deflate."

CHANGING THE COVENANT

More and more, American public opinion is coming to realize what a service was performed by the famous minority of "irreconcilables" in the Senate when they prevented the United States from joining the League of Nations at the behest of President Wilson. At the time they were bitterly reviled as stupid nationalists who, although unable to grasp the President's vision, were able to block it and because of personal animosity or party prejudice thwarted the will of the majority. But later events, particularly those of the last year, have vindicated their votes in a remarkable fashion.

In the case of the fight over the covenant of the League of Nations in the Senate, distance may not lend enchantment to the view. The fight was too bitter for that. But it does lend clarity. Today it is possible for any reasonable person to see what the dust of battle obscured thirteen years ago, that men on each side were fighting under the banners of high principle. In particular, it is evident that among the irreconcilables were men who detected the flaw in the covenant that has now cracked Wilson's conception of the League from end to end. They saw that peace can not be preserved by the threat of war, the theory that he called the "heart of the covenant." Japan has proved it.

CONFIDENCE IN PRESIDENT HOOVER

To the millions who voted for President Hoover in 1928, with very few exceptions, he still stands as a beacon in the stress of these years of depression just as he did during his past experiences when his great heart and mind were tremendously active for the welfare of mankind. Those critics who assail him little realize what this man has done. It Is so easy to blame, when these commentators would prove weaklings were they at the helm.

The President has the confidence of those who think, of those who know how much he has accomplished under terrific handicaps. That confidence which his followers had In 1928 we feel still exists and will persist in his election for a second term.

At Nauvoo, Ohio, a coal dealer, has his office in a building 8X10 feet, with brick foundation and fire proof roof, built of 8 tons of block coal.

WHAT NEW TAXES MEAN—

A recent Associated Press dispatch from Washington gave an interesting insight into what the new revenue bill will mean to the average citizen of the country.

A married business man with one child, having a net income of $6,000, will pay an income tax to the Federal Government of $124 as against $23.63 in the past. If he buys a $600 automobile he will have to pay a new tax of $18, plus 60 cents for taxes on tires, etc. If he uses 700 gallons of gasoline during the year and 30 gallons of lubricating oil, he will pay a tax of $8.20, in addition to state gas and oil taxes. If his wife gets a $200 fur coat the tax will be $20.

If he makes home brew he will pay about $3 in taxes on malt. His wife's perfumes, powder, etc., will cost another $3. If he buys a $75 radio and pays $100 for an electric refrigerator, the taxes will be $3.75 and $5, respectively. He will pay increased taxes on cameras, electricity, matches, the telephone and a hundred other commodities and services. If he spends $2 a week for shows and movies, the Treasury will get $10 from him by the end of the year.

His total direct taxes will be about $310, as against about $174 under the old rates—an increase of $236.

IN DAYS OF OLD

FORTY YEARS AGO

The Garrett County Bank, postoffice and other public buildings were closed on July 4. Residences of citizens were decorated with flags and bunting and a gala day was evident. Members of the Lutheran church held a festival in Hamill and Little's Hall and the Oakland Catholic Benevolent Legion had a dance and picnic at Kilbourne's Grove in the east end of town where Browning's orchestra furnished the music. There was a display of fireworks and also a grand ball at the Oakland Hotel. A ball was given by the Oakland Cornet band at Offutt's Hall during the evening.

The July term of the Circuit Court was in session. The docket contained fifty-four cases for trial and there were thirteen appeals. It is worthy of note to state that the court docket was heavier in those days than in the present time.

In the Gorman Letter: The Fourth of July has come and gone, which brought quite a number to our town and ere long a fight was precipitated with a beer bottle as a weapon which lasted nearly half an hour. Several more occurred during the day and in the evening there were many persons with black eyes, mutilated forms and blasted names.

In the Altamont Letter: Everything passed off smoothly until late in the afternoon when some three or four heathen, filled up on fighting whiskey, tried to create some disturbance.

Dr. O. G. Getty turned over his practice at Grantsville to Dr. Bruce Lichty and moved to Meyersdale, Pa.

Capt. J. M. Jarboe, contractor, recently completed another house at Monte Vista, which was named "Tyee House."

TWENTY YEARS AGO

Mayor McComas and Councilmen Johnson, Naylor, Gonder, Selby, Davis and Lauer, cosidering the welfare of the public, directed the policeman to notify automobile owners not to exceed the speed limit of twelve miles an hour in the town limits.

At the height of a severe storm two fires were started in Oakland, one at the variety store of George M. Mason and the other at the electric light plant. At the latter no damage resulted. At the Mason store the blaze was communicated to a quantity of fireworks. Lightning was also conveyed into the First National Bank Building, setting the ceiling of the postoffice on fire but doing practically no damage.

The death of Capt. John M. Jarboe, late postmaster, was noted.

Following the visit of a committee from the Oakland Civic Club and the protests of a number of residents of Oakland, the County Commissioners in session assembled decided not to erect a stable on the Court House square which was to have been used by the Sheriff.

Engineers began a survey of the National Pike for completion of improvements at once to the Pennsylvania State line, fifteen miles west of Grantsville.

DIED.

CLYDE ALBERT OPEL

Clyde Albert Opel, only son of Mr. and Mrs. John Opel, of Keyser's Ridge, died July 3, at the age of 11 years, 5 months and 7 days. A week prior to the child's death he was stricken with the measles and later pneumonia developed, which caused his death. Funeral services were conducted at the family home on Tuesday afternoon, Rev. Fickenscher, of the Cove church, officiating.

Besides his parents the youth is survived by six sisters, one of whom, Claudine, is a twin.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

From 1862 until the Civil War ended the Maryland Bible Society continued its program of distribution to Maryland soldiers in both armies. Not that others were denied, but a genuine effort was made to assure every son of this State a copy of the Scriptures, whether he wore the blue or the gray.

In 1862, despite the economic upheaval caused by the war, we learn that the Bible House was free from debt and that auxiliaries continued to work. Among these auxiliaries was the Female Bible Society of Princess Anne, Maryland, which has had a continuous active existence for 104 years. We shall have more to say about this remarkable organization in a later article.

Among the soldiers in the year 1862 28,541 volumes were distributed. Vessels of the navy had received books. In camp and hospitall volumes were distributed among both the invalid and active troops. Doubtless much comfort and blessing came to the convalescents, as well as the men on active duty. The writer has heard many touching stories resulting from this form of missionary work to men under arms. There are instances on record where the little Testament has not only been the means of saving the soul, but also of saving the soldier's life as it rested over his heart, by resisting a partly spent ball.

The general condition of the Society remained prosperous and healthy. At the close of the civil strife it was found that the difficulties of that trying period had only served as an incentive to greater endeavors. The utmost harmony pervaded the board, in all its operations. There had not been a single clash of thought or feeling to jar upon the Christian distribution of the Gospel. Large numbers of Bibles, freely donated by the American Bible Society, for Southern armies, had been forwarded, with the full concurrence of the proper authorities to Southern destinations.

The impression that the South would not accept such volumes had been proven incorrect, and volumes had even been sold for the Southern field. In the early spring of 1863, 5,000 Testaments were sent to the Virginla Bible Society, and warm thanks were received for them. In May, 1863, 9,000 more Testaments were sent thither.

What an example of the unity inspired by the pure unadultered word of Life, as against the strife and divisions of ecclesiastical bodies! Almost every Protestant church had become a house divided because of political differences and sectional strife. The Maryland Bible Society and its great parent body, the American Bible Society, stood like Gibralter, demonstrating the truth of the Biblical slogan—"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever."

President Lincoln's emancipation proclamation in 1863, and Maryland's new State Constitution in 1864 brought to our State a large accession to the numbers requiring Christian nurture. To meet the social changes in the colored population of the State, five colporteurs were employed and 50,425 volumes were distributed. The demands for Bibles from soldiers now rapidly decreased, because of the disbanding of a large part of the emergency army. The war was over, and the Society looked forward with hopefulness to a resumption of its more immediate work within the State.

A Reminiscent Testimony and Some Appeals in Behalf of Temperance.

To the Editor of The Republican.

For some time I have felt that I should write of my past experience with reference to what I hold to have been a very helpful factor in the influcnce excrted upon my life by The Republican through its Temperance columns, in the early days, the days of my boyhood, when James A. Hayden occupied the editor's sanctum. Back in the early days of this county, as such, when the subject of "local option" began to be broached and advocated, there was at first considerable sentiment against such restrictive measures. Those advocating the proposed movement in many cases were perhaps not as consistent in practice as they might have been, and the result was that the agitation did not beget confidence as it would perhaps otherwise have commanded. At any rate its adoption would require some self-denial and interfere with some previously exercised privileges (?) and a goodly number of people were unwilling to commit themselves to a movement which might later not prove desirable. The movement gained force and influence, and district after district became forbidden area for the exploitation of spirituous liquors as beverages, and then finally the entire county become forbidden territory for the sale of intoxicating drinks.

But The Republican continuously and persistently published articles, treaties, accounts and narratives of the baneful, injurious and ruinous effects and disastrous results of the use of intoxicating drinks which impressed me until I became thoroughly imbued with the idea of the merit and virtue of personal temperance and of total abstinence of alcoholic liquors as beverages, and whether local option prevailed or not I had schooled myself to an attitude and status of safety. And it did not make a whit of difference to me personally as far as myself was concerned, when the Eighteenth Amendment became a part of the Constitution of the United States and became effective, for it did not require the least change in my case to be obedient to its requirements. Personal observation confirmed and re-inforced the principles disseminated as stated above, to fortify me more firmly and solidly in my adopted course. As stated before,I rejoice in the privilege and am willing to bear testimony of the value of the teaching thus presented and set forth. It cannot be said that I am doing this for the sake of popular gain for I shall do it incognito. Furthermore, it seems we are at a place where it is not very popular for any one to advocate total abstinence or even somewhat less rigid temperence attitudes. Yet I believe the people of this nation of ours will in the near future either maintain a conservative safe, sound temperance attitude, or become startingly aware of the ruinous folly which they have brought upon themselves through a reckless resort to removal of restraints which will give freer rein to the use of alcoholic drinks.

Governor Roosevelt has declared his approval of the proposition, and his personal endorsement of the movement to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment. In the same speech he also declared "we do not want the saloon to come back." The saloon did not make people drunk, except by means of the alcoholic liquor which was sold there. And under any other name under the sun it would have had the same effect with the dispensing of the same kind and quantity of liquor. The American people are asked to take a leap into the dark. They are asked to give up a definite something which has been a barrier to the liquor traffic for something which has not been definitely proposed, and concerning which there is not the least assurance, or specification in proposal. Seemingly anything will suffice just so this definite something, which we have now, is abolished. The liquor lover says there is more liquor drunk now then would be if we had license to dispense liquors. Is he "a seventh son of a seventh son"? or how does he formulate his conclusions of prophecy? If he bases his conclusions upon what had been in the past, he well knows, and so does every other sane person, who uses his thinking faculties, that if prohibition had increased the freedom of liquor accessibility, as he pretends to believe, that this Eighteenth Amendment would be the very objective of his desires and advocacies.

Men and boys, who well know that their ancestry has liquor tendencies in its composition, and who have had personal experience with liquor temptations themselves, yet rejoice at the announcement of the proposed relaxation of liquor regulations and restrictions. Some of them have lost respect and confidence on the part of thinking people, and at best have marred their temporal respect for years to come, and they have set the odds against themselves to succeed in life.

The man who indulges his already strong appetite for liquor is trifling with mighty and unrelaxing factors unto his ruin and destruction. He overestimates his powers of resistance and in the same instance underestimates the grip which the habit of drunkenness and the thirst for liquor is fastening upon him. Men who have declared themselves masters of themselves have found out too late that habit and appetite has fastened itself upon them with relentless and merciless grip. Let a man become an addict to the drink habit and he is subject, as a rule to most, if not all other vices.

The younger man says: "I am not a fool like my father: I can drink whenever I want to, and I can leave it alone whenever I so desire"; his father thought likewise. The son calls his drinking father a fool. But the son knows what the outcome was in the father's case, and notwithstanding the patent ancestral tendencies goes on like his father did, and—dies a suicide! And I assure you, dear reader, this is not an imaginary example. It has had its enactment in fact within the confines of our own regions.

A very capable business man, when in normal condition, told me that he never had respect for the man who sold him liquor, regardless of how great and compelling his thirst might be for liquor, with one exception and that exception was the man who refused him liquor when he began to drink to excess. Yet, persistent and moderate drinking frequently leads to excessive.

In the "good old days of the past", many, perhaps it is nearer the truth to say, most people had a little whiskey in the house for cases of emergency. And I am positively sure there were more emergencies in consequence. And in real cold weather a little of the stimulant was occasionally taken to keep warm. And it sent the blood the faster to the surface to cool off, yet the victim was duped into feeling warm. It was also considered very useful for snake bites. There are only two kinds of venomous snakes native to this and adjacent reglons—the rattlesnake and the copperhead, and whiskey used In the case of a bite from either of these would hasten the circulation and resultantly hurry the venom through the blood stream. All our other snakes are not venomous and are not nearly as dangerous as the delirium "snakes" brot on by indulgence in liquor. And liquor, being such a universally recognized good thing in the olden days, small boys naturally had a taste of it, now and then, and acquired a pronounced taste for it, and beyond question many a sip was taken on th sly, and when, on a fateful, never-to-be-forgotten day some favorite son was seen staggering about, having indulged his growing taste too freely, it was, in many cases, a result of long-continued small indulgences.

I asked a relative, "why did so and so's sons turn out failures through drinking vices? The answer was "their father used to have whiskey about and it was freely served to the harvest hands".

An old lay-member of the church was waited upon by two representatives of the ministry because of his endorsement of an applicant for a liquor license. As respondent to the ministerial citation he complained that conditions had so greatly changed since the "good old days." Among his assertions was the statement that whiskey used to be as freely dispensed as water and that there was no noticeable drunkeness then. But the well-meaning patriarch was permitted to proceed with his widely ranging narratives and it was but a short time until he included in his story, the account of erection of a log building in which figured old timers who were drunk and who quarreled to the extent of settling their differences through adjudication by fists.

I used to marvel at the drinking tendencies of a certain family—don't try to guess, for our home county like others, has many a family to whom the above allegation would fully apply. But in conversation one day an aged man remarked incidentally that on one occasion when he was with the father of this family, the father could not get the gate open in broad daylight. And later I chanced to be with one of the sons whom I considered an eminently worthy man, who was then a visitor from a western state, and under certain circumstances I know he sought for some "whiskey". I had recognized effect or result as applied to this family; at last I had come to also discern cause.

When the aged brother in the church voiced his lamentations of liquor not being what it had been in the "good old times", the preachers soon silenced him on this score by reminding him that if his conception of the situation be true, it was not the liquor of the days past that was being drunk then, but the quality and kind of the day when it was drunk, which was being poured down the throats of its hapless victims. And the time of this episode was back some years before the enactment of the Volstead amendment. But the preachers knew also some scripture, which from their viewpoint applied, and which they confidently asserted went back far, far beyond any of the "good old days" of the brother's recollections, and back of the days of his parental ancestors of many generations. They referred to Proverbs 20:1, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." "Strong drink is raging" is a definitive assertion which applies as truly today as it did when written, and the men who made "moonshine" more than forty years ago, to furnish their own supplies of "firewater" became as beastly, ragingly drunk as the grog-slave of before or since. Some of the worst drunks I ever knew were also members of the well-organized "moonshine" fraternity. They had had enough experience to insure "quality" in their product.

I regret that the question or repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment should have been granted recognition by either of the dominant parties. And that its repeal should be flatly demanded by the organization which professed to be rather strict constructionists on constitutional grounds. Yet nullification has been chosen before and in attempt applied within the history of our nation, hence we need be on guard lest we be "like dumb cattle driven". On one occasion at Mountain Lake Park, Sam Jones berated the Republicans for blindly following party dictation. It raised quite a laugh in the audience. I suppose much of this came from the opposition. "Sam" waited until the laugh was through and then exploded this bomb, "and you Democrats would vote for anything your party put up, even if it were a "yaller dog".

After all, haven't we enough manhood of morals and sturdy character, irrespective of political affiliations, to maintain principles and sentiments of moral rectitude and purity in community, commonwealth and nation? Are the intelligent masses of our people so inclined to grovel before the demands of debased appetite as to yield sanction to that which is recognized as a common, pernicious nuisance? And what will be the result when the government again recognizes the selling of intoxicating liquors for purposes of beverages as a legitimate business, which is the purpose of the proposed repeal of the amendment. Are all other laws conducive to mortality, but which are in many cases winked at, or inadequately enforced, also to be treated in like manner? Did not France recognize prostitution as a "necessary evil", and give this abominable vice and sin governmental recognition, and thus legalize and legitimatize harlotry and whoredom? Is it not well-known that in our own land such vices and abominations abound; shall all extensively violated and transgressed laws be rejealed, and crime and delinquency eventually receive state sanction? If the people yield to all demands for the repeal of all statutes of law and order, how shall order and equity be maintained?

But, however gloomy and depressing the manifest trend and status of the multitude may be there is yet an open door for the individual, and the word of truth is yet constant: "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city".—Prov. 16:32. The injunetion stands fixed and immutable in the midst of the waves and waverings of the tides of human opinion and variableness and fate: "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." "Turn not to the right hand nor to the left: remove thy foot from evil."—Prov. 4:23, 27. For after all the pure and just and righteous do not require restrictive laws of compulsion to keep them decent and moral; and "He that hath no rule over his own spirit is like a city that is broken down, and without walls."—Prov. 25:28. Anyone who loves strong drink, or who is prone to tamper with it will find sound and safe counsel in the commandment "Look not . . . upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth colour in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

I appeal in the last words of John B. Gough, "Young man, make your record clear."

The Charter Which Created Maryland

WAS SIGNED BY CHARLES 1 JUST 300 YEARS AGO

by

HESTER DORSEY RICHARDSON

In The Baltimore Sunday Sun

The Charter of Maryland granted by King Charles I of England to Cecilius Calvert passed the Great Seal and was signed by the King at Westminster on June 20, 1632. By this Royal Act, Cecilius Calvert became the First Proprietary of Maryland, the largest domain ever granted to an individual in the New World; according to authorities it included from ten to twelve million acres of land and water.

By the provisions of this ample grant, Maryland was to be erected into a Province with all the royal rights and privileges of the "Palantinate of Durham," and Calvert was empowered "to confer Titles, make laws (with consent of the Freeman) and to be forever exempt from taxation." The Proprietary of Maryland was to hold it "by Fealty only" and "not by Knight's Service," paying to the King or his heirs, "Two Indian Arrows" of those parts to be delivered at "Our Castle of Windsor every yeere on the Tuesday in Easter week," (also one-fifth part of "any gold or silver oare that may be found," which was an empty provision).

The passing of the Charter was a momentous event, not only to Cecilius Calvert, who thus became the "Prince of Maryland," but also to the horde of ill-wishers who had wrested it from Sir George Calvert, "whom the King delighted to honor," this coveted grant which his Majesty had prepared for him but of which death, after unwarranted delays in its passage, had suddenly deprived him two months before.

That the news of the granting of the Maryland Charter became at once the "buzz of the Town" is certain and from Whitehall and the great houses of the nobility, to the taverns and ale houses along the Thames, rendezvous of possible colonists and of those seventeenth century monsters, the "crimps" of London, who kidnapped children to sell to the plantations, it was the chief topic.

The shouting and the tumult which had turned the "Starre Chamber" sessions into a riot since early in the year 1631, when the Governor and Council of Virginia and other members of the Old Virginla Company first entered their protests against Sir George Calvert, "the Papist," being granted any land in or near to Virginia, after the King had issued him a warrant for "a precinct of land below the James river," that year, continued to follow him through life.

This gift had been made by King Charles in response to Sir George Calvert's letter dated at Ferryland, Newfoundland, 19th of August, 1629, in which he asked for land in a milder climate in which to scttle with his family.

It has taken 300 years to clear away the mists that have obscured the truth regarding the causes which hindered and handicapped Sir George Calvert and later his son Cecilius in their desire to establish a happy domain on the new continent.

The whole sorry tale of the defeat of Sir George Calvert's dream of colonization along the waters of the Chesapeake, strangely has never been told, but is familiar to historical research workers in the accounts left by Cecilius Calvert, preserved in the Sloan manuscript in the British Museum, and in the Star Chamber and Privy Council records, London.

When King Charles I declared in the Charter to Lord Baltimore his purpose "to more eminently distinguish Maryland above all other regions in those parts (of America) and to decorate it with more ample titles" by erecting it into a Province, with "all the Royal Rights and Privileges of the Palantiate of Durham," he set the standard of its jurisdiction by this last surviving Palantinate in England, whose powers are enumerated by the late Dr. Clayton C. Hall, as follows:

The authirity of a count palatine was little short of royal. On account of the military necessities of his frontier positlon, he was authorized to summon his feudal forces to resist invasion without waiting to communicate with the King. In this manner the Bishops of Durham exercised dominion from their ancient and beautiful seat and stronghold near the Scottish border.

The authority of the Bishops of Durham extended not only to military matters; it lncluded civil jurisdiction as well. Judges were appointed by them and justice was administered and crimes punished, not in the name of the Crown, but of the Blshop.

All the conditions which originally led to the creation of counties palatine applied to colonies planted in the New World. They were essentially frontier settlements, removed from the seat of government by a much greater distance than any border county of the kingdom, with still greater difficulties of communication.

The orderly government of the colony required the establishment of courts by which the laws could be enforced and wrongs redressed. Ample authority for the exercise of all the powers of government within the Province of Maryland, independent of any interference or control on the part of the Crown, was conferred upon Lord Baltimore by the terms of his charter.

Among those in high places who had so long opposed the grant to the Catholic Calverts, its passage aroused speedy efforts to annul it before it coud be put into effect. At first the work of Calvert's enemies was done under cover, but none the less hampered Lord Baltimore's colonlization plans, so that while the Charter was signed and passed to Cecilius Calvert on June 20, 1632, he did not issue his famous first bid for colonists until February 20, 1633, eight months later.

The first formal attempt to have Cecilius Calvert's Charter annulled was on July 3, 1633, at the "Starre Chamber" in the form of "an humble Petition of the Planters of Virginia," presented to his Majesty, in which they remonstrated against some grants lately obtained "of a great proportion of land and Territory within the Lymitts of their Colonie" (whose Charter had been annulled since 1624). The result was that the Lords Commissioners for Foreign Plantations upheld the King's grant to the second Lord Baltimore and "the other Parties were left to the course of Lawe."

So persistent, however, were the enemies of Calvert in their determination to defeat his ambitions as they had those of his father, that he never had the happiness of visiting the Province which grew apace despite what the records describe as "the spleen of his enemies." Although Cecilius Calvert had all his plans to conduct his colonists to Maryland and no doubt expected to reside here as the Proprietary, he never dared leave England long enough even to visit the Land of Sanctuary, the peaceful name by which his Province came to be known.

Letters that would be highly amusing were they not so tragic in their results, still survive in the Record Office, London. Of these two quotations will suffice to illustrate the neighborly attitude of the Virginians.

In a letter from Governor Harvey to Secretary Windebank, dated in Virginia, December 16, 1634, the Governor expresses his happiness to have been of service to Lord Baltimore, counting it one of his "happie dayes" next unto that day wherein I was designed to doe his Majestie service in this place." He then proceeds to extol "the nobleness of my Lord Baltimore and his designs" and promises to do him all the service he is able, after which he bemoaned the fact that he, the Governor, "had little influence at the Council table, where many are so averse (to Calvert) as that they crye and make it their familiar talke that they would rather knock their cattle on the heads than sell them to Maryland."

Again he dilates on the belligerence of Captain Matthews, an unruly member of whom he says that, "upon reading some letters from Engand (evidently favorable to Lord Baltimore's Province), "he threw his hatt upon the ground, scratching his head, and in a fury stamping cryed, 'a pox on Maryland.'"

Shortly after the passage of the Maryland Charter it was evidently issued in printed form and by a fortunate circumstance a copy is now in Maryland, the prized possession of Benjamin Howell Griswold, Jr., of Baltimore. It is in the original paper cover and is indorsed "Charter of Maryland English Coppy Corrected." It is, I believe, the only known copy.

According to Mr. Lawrence C. Wroth, "the erasures and corrections in a contemporary hand that makes for exactness and elegance in the translation are the sort of verbal improvement that might have been incorporated by its translator or by some one close to Lord Baltimore in the first copy of the first edition of the charter to come from the printer."

Several transalations of the Charter differ in occasional words, similar in meaning, which would naturally occur In translations from one language to another made by different scholars.

This Charter of Mr. Grlswold's has the rare royal arms of Charles Iabove the text on the first page, which arms, according to Mr. Wroth, an authority on Colonial charters, are not found on the several other editions of this Maryland document.

The original Charter of Maryland given to Cecilius Calvert by the King is lost, and, until it is found, we will never know whether or not the engrossed Charter included the corrections or alterations made on this first printed copy, for every other printed edition Issued in succeeding years corresponds to the unedited phraseology of the original manuscript patent, preserved in Latin in the Public Record Office, London, and from which, of course, the Charter was engrossed for Lord Baltimore. In the contemporary portrait of Cecilius Calvert, he is shown with the Charter of Maryland held in his right hand.

The original parchment presented to Lord Baltimore by the King is not among the Calvert papers at the Maryland Historical Society; neither has it been found among the State papers in other depositories. So far as is known it has never been offered for sale in London, where many Calvert documents of importance have been secured by Marylanders during the past few years. Among the latter, by a happy coincidence, orlginal manuscripts bearing on the story of the first steps toward Maryland's Charter, have come to Baltimore. They were secured by Dr. Hugh H. Young in 1920 at a sale of Calvert papers at Quaritch's, in London.

The first of these is the original draft of Sir George Calvert's letter to King Charles I, dated at Ferryland in Newfoundland, August 19, 1629, in which he asked for a grant of land in Virginia, "with such privileges as the King your father my gracious master granted me here." In this letter Sir George thanked his Majesty "upon my kneese for assistance in lending me a faire shipp," etc.

Another is the warrant from the King "to Mr. William Noye Esqr. His Majesty Atturney Generall," signed by the Earle of Dorsete, Lord Wentworth and Lord Cottington, dated in February, 1631, directing him to prepare a grant to Lord Baltimore "of that tract or precinct of land lying from the Bay of Chesapeack and the River of Pohatan otherwise called James River on the North . . . unto the River of Passamagus on the South, etc. . . with the same conditions of honour and advantage as the other patent was granted which he had from the late King, his Maties' Father . . . for a part of Newfoundland . . . with all the clauses therein conteyned; saving that he is not to have any exemption from Custome or other Dutyes, etc."

The Sloan manuscript states that the old dissolved Company of Virginia endeavored to obstruct this warrant, and to comply with their wishes his Lordship desired his Majesty to grant him in lieu thereof some part of that continent to the northward, which was accordingly granted, and a bill prepared and brought to his Majesty to sign. This new warrant, dated March 17, 1632, "for a grant of land in America near adjoining to the old Colony of Virginia" is the first Charter in which "the Province of Marilland in memory and honor of the Queene" was granted to a Calvert, the first Lord Baltimore. That he died before it passed the Great Seal we know, but its presence in Maryland is of more than passing interest.

In fact, all of these original documents belonging to Dr. Young constitute museum manuscripts in connection with Maryland history and should if possible, be acquired by the State for its Hall of Records now about to be built as a memorial to the Lords Baltimore.

We would not do full honor to the founder of Maryland today nor to the memory of his father, Sir George Calvert, who was the original mover in the effort to settle Maryland, did we not refressh our memories regarding the remarkable provisions of thls Charter and emphasize the high tribute to Sir George Calvert and to his son Cecilius incorporated in the Charter itself.

This is true particularly as the document has forever put on record the motives actuating the Calverts in their colonization dreams. It should silence those who have questioned their high purposes, for the fulfillment of which they expended their several fortunes. Both father and son, of course, hoped for material success in founding a province. None the less they were moved by an ideal in the provislons of lts government, as proven by the terms of the Charter, prepared, it is believed, by Sir George Calvert's own hand. With a slight reduction in the southern boundary, It is the same document that made us not only the Land of Sanctuary to those of all faiths, but the Free State as well, by giving Maryland exemp-

THE CALL OF MOSES

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 2:11-4:20.

GOLDEN TEXT—And he said, Certainly I will be with thee; and this shall be a token unto thee, that I have sent thee: When thus hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Bush on Fire.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Moses Given a Great Task.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Hearing and Heeding God's Call.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Accepting a Great Task.

I. Moses Trained in Midian (2:11-15).

The occasion of his being in the desert was the effort of Pharaoh to slay him when he heard of Moses' act in slaying the Egyptian who was smiting a Hebrew. Having fled from the face of Pharaoh, he took up his abode in the land of the Midianites. He himself needed further discipline for his great work. This he experienced through forty years in the desert.

II. His Marriage to Zipporah (2:16-22).

Soon after his arrival in the Land of Midian he defended the daughters of Reuel, the priest of Midian, against the shepherds, and watered their flock. Out of gratitude for this act Moses was called into the priest's house to eat bread. While dwelling in this house Zipporah, a daughter of the priest, became his wife.

III. The Lord Speaks to Moses at the Burning Bush (3:1-6).

While keeping the flock of his father-in-law in the desert the Lord appeared to Moses in a vision in a burning bush. Moses stepped aside to behold this strange sight and was taught the lesson of proper approach to God, who revealed himself as the God of his fathers, the covenant God.

IV. Moses Commissioned as the Deliverer of His People (3:7-10).

1. God's active interest in his people (v. 7).

a. "I have seen the affliction of my people." So keenly conscious is God of all that goes on in the world that not one of his chosen ones can be touched without his notice.

b. "I have heard their cries." No cry ever goes up to God from his child unheard.

c. "I know their sorrows." Many indeed are the sorrows of God's children, but he knows all about them and will adapt himself in grace to their need.

2. God's gracious obligation to his people (vv. 8, 9).

a. To deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians.

b. "To bring them up out of that land."

c. "To bring them into a good land and large, into a land flowing with milk and honey."

3. God's commission to Moses (v. 10). This call seems to have been a great surprise to Moses.

V. Moses' Objections Patiently Heard and Removed (3:11-4:16).

1. His personal unworthiness (v. 11). He said, "Who am I that I should go unto Pharaoh?" He realized his insufficiency for his task. Moses did not refuse to go, but laid his difficulty before the Lord. God answered this difficulty by assuring him that he would be with him.

2. The difficulty of the people to understand Moses' relationship to God (vv. 13, 14). Moses knew how unwilling they were to acknowledge him as their deliverer forty years before. Since God changes his name as he assumes a new relationship to his people, Moses inquired as to what that new relationship would be and his corresponding name. This new name is "I AM." This name is from the Hebrew verb "to be." It indicates:

a. God's self-existence. It sets forth the idea that God is the self-existent one and the source of all existence.

b. His self-sufficiency. He said, "I AM THAT I AM." God is the unique one. He is not dependent upon any other existence.

c. His unchangeableness. "I AM THAT I AM" may be expanded to mean "I am what I always was. What I always was and am, I always will be."

3. Unbelief on the part of the people (4:1-5). This difficulty the Lord met by supplying him with credentials which could not be gainsaid. He was given the power to perform supernatural wonders.

4. Lack of eloquence (4:10). Moses confessed that he was slow of speech and of a slow tongue. His ability to speak had not been improved since the Lord had spoken to him. This difficulty the Lord in his infinite patience met by providing an assistant in the person of his brother Aaron.

Laughter

Laughter should dimple the cheek, not furrow the brow. A jest should be such that all shall be able to join in the laugh which it occasions; but if it bears hard upon one of the company, like the crack of a string, it makes a stop in the music.—Feltham.

Consider This

In all differences consider that both you and your opponent or enemy are mortal, and that ere long your very memories will be extinguished.—Aurel.

THE CHARTER WHICH CREATED MARYLAND

tion from taxation forever and the right to make its own laws.

To fully appreciate the differences between a province and a colony, we must recall that by the royal gesture which erected Maryland into a Province, the King divested himself of all authority in Maryland and put in Calvert's hands the appointing power for Church and State, civil and military.

Maryland was thus not "one of His Majesty's Plantations" to which convicts could be sent from the jails of England. When later some captains of merchant vessels sold a few to the planters, a law was immediately passed prohibiting the practice. English "Colonies" were governed directly by officials appointed by the King, and were thus parts of his dominions, and to these convicts and other undesirables could be sent at the King's pleasure. Not so to Lord Baltimore's "Province of Maryland."

The Charter itself begins with the high tribute to the First and Second Lords Baltimore:

THE CHARTER OF MARYLAND

CHARLES by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, etc. To all to whom these Presents shall come greeting.

WHEREAS Our right Trusty and Well-beloved Subject Cecilius Calvert, Baron of Baltemore in our Kingdom of Ireland, Sonne and heire of Sir George Calvert Knight, late Baron of Baltemore in the same Kingdom of Ireland, pursuing his Father's intentions, being excited with a laudable and pious zeale for the propagation of the Christian Faith, and the enlargement of our Empire and Dominion, hath humbly besought leave of Us, by his industry and charge, to transport an ample Colony of the English Nation unto a certaine Countrey hereafter described, in the parts of America, not yet cultivated and planted, though in some parts thereof inhabited by certaine barbarous people, having no knowledge of Almighay God, and hath humbly besought our Royall Majestie to give, grant and confirm all the said Countrey, with certaine Priviledges and Jurisdictions, requisite for the good government and state of his Colony, and Countrey aforesaid, to him and his heires for ever.

KNOW YEE THEREFORE, That Wee favouring the Pious and Noble purpose of the said Barons of Baltemore, of our speciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, have given, granted and confirmed, and by this our present Charter, for Us, Our Heires and Successors, doe give, grant and confirme unto the said Cecillus, now Baron of Baltemore, his heires and Assignes, all that part of a Peninsula, lying in the parts of America, betweene the Ocean on the East and the Bay of Chesopeack on the West, and divided from the other part thereof, by a right line drawne from the Promontory or Cape of Land called Watkins Point (situate in the foresaid Bay, neere the river of Wighco) on the West, unto the maine Ocean on the East.

Omitting boundaries of the Western Shore, mention of a ten-mile control seaward and the specifications as to fishing of all sorts, "including whales, sturgeons and all other royal fishes in the sea," we find the following:

And Furthermore the Patronages and Advowsons of all Churches, which (as Christian Religion shall increase within the Countrey, Iles, Iletts and limits aforesaid) shall happen hereafter to bee erected: together with licence and power, to build and found Churches, Chapells and Oratories, in convenient and fit places within the premises, and to cause them to be dedicated, and consecrated according to the Ecclesiasticall Lawes of our Kingdom of England: Together with all and singular the like, and as ample rights, Jurisdictions, Priviledges, Prerogatives, Royalties, Liberties, Immunities, Royall rights, and franchises of what kind soever temporall, as well by Sea, as by land, within the Countrey, Iles, Iletts, and limits aforesaid; to have, exercise, use and enjoy the same as amply as any Bishop of Durham, within the Bishoprick, or County Palatine of Durham, in our Kingdome of England, hath at any time heretofore had, held, used, or enjoyed, or of right ought, or might have had, held, used or enjoyed.

And him the said now Lord Baltemore, his Heires and Assignes, Wee doe by these Presents for Us, our Heires and Successors, make, create, and constitute the true and absolute Lords, and Proprietaries of the Countrey aforesaid, and of all other the Premises (except before excepted), saving alwayes, the faith and allegeance, and Soveraigne dominion due unto Us, Our Heires and Successors.

The document provides for the annual payment of two Indian arrows, for a royal fifth of all the gold and silver found, and continues:

Now that the said Countrey thus by US granted, and described, may be eminent above all other parts of the said territory, and dignified with larger titles: Know yee that wee of our further grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, have thought fit to erect the same Countrey and Ilands into a Province, as out of the fullness of Our Royall Power, and prerogative, Wee doe, for Us, Our Heires and Successors, erect, and incorporate them into a Province, and doe call it (Terra Mariæ) Mary land, and So from henceforth will have it called.

And forasmuch as Wee have hereby made and ordained the foresaid now Lord Baltemore, the true Lord, and Proprietary of all the Province aforesaid: Know yee therefore moreover, that Wee, reposing speciall trust and confidence in the fidelitie, wisedome, Justice and Provident circumspection of the said now Lord Baltemore, for Us, Our Heires, and Successors, doe grant free, full and absolute power, by vertue of these Presents, to him and his heires, for the good and happy government of the said Province, to ordaine, make, enact, and under his and their seales to publish any Lawes whatsoever, appertaining either unto the publick State of the said Province or unto the Private utility of particular Persons, according unto their best discretions, of and with the advise, assent and approbation of the Freemen of the said Province, or the greater part of them, or of their delegates or deputies, whom for the enacting of the said Lawes, when, and as often as neede shall require, We will that the said now Lord Baltemore, and his heires, shall assemble in such sort and forme, as to him or them shall seeme best.

The Charter provided for "the establish of Courts and Tribunals, Appointments of Judges, Justices, etc.," and arranged for the defense of the Province by fortifying it "with Castles, Forts and other places of strength for the public and their own private defense at the Appointment of the said now Lord Baltimore." The King decreed that all English subjects who should go to the Province "shall remain liege people of us and that their children born in Maryland shall be the same. Furthermore," the Charter provides:

That the way to honors and dignities, may not seeme to be altogether precluded and shut up, to men well borne, and such as shall prepare themsleves unto this present Plantation, and shall desire to deserve well of Us, and Our Kingdomes, both in peace and war, in so farre distant and remote a Countrey: Therefore Wee, for Us, Our Heires and Successors, doe give free, and absolute power, unto the said now Lord Baltemore, his heires and assignes, to conferre favours, Honors, and honors, upon such inhabitants with in the Province aforesaid, as shall deserve the same; and to invest them, with what titles and dignities soever, as he shall thinke fit (so as they do not such as are now in England).

License was also given to Lord Baltimore and his heirs to erect any parcells of land within the Province aforesaid, into Manors and in every of the said Manors, to have, and to hold a Court Baron, with all things whatsoever, which to a Court Baron doe belong, and to have and hold viewe of Franck-pledge (for the conservation of the peace, and the better government of those Parts,) by themselves or their stewards, or by the Lords for the time being of other Manors, to bee deputed when they shall bee erected: and in the same, to use all things belonging to View of Franck-Pledge.

The document specifically relinquishes all rights of the King to collect taxes in the Province and adds the valuable injunction that "the said Province of Maryland, its tenants and inhabitants shall not from henceforth be held or reputed as a member or a part of the land of Virginia or of any other Colony whatsoever."

The final evidence of the King's faith in and devotion to Lord Baltimore is found in the concluding provision of the Charter:

And if perchance hereafter it should happen, that any doubts or questions should arise, concerning the true sence and understanding of any word, clause or sentence contained in Our present Charter, Wee will, ordaine and command, that at all times, and in all things such Interpretation bee made thereof, and allowed in any of Our Courts whatsoever, so shall be judged most advantagious, and favourable unto the said now Lord Baltemore, his heires and assignes. Provided, alwayes, that no Interpretation bee admitted thereof, by which God's Holy and Truely Christian Religion, or the allegiance due unto Us, Our Heires and Successors, may in any thing suffer any prejudice, or diminution.

Mr. Griswold's copy of the Maryland Charter may be regarded as one of the most valuable records of the State's early history known to be in existence today. Even should the original be discovered—a possibility that becomes more remote as the years pass—its value scarcely will be diminished. Maryland historians express the hope that some day (together with Dr. Young's collection of Calvert papers and several other known collections of documents of the early period) it may be placed in company with the State's own historical treasures in the new Maryland Hall of Records, which is planned as a substantial contribution by the State to the Tercentenary of 1934.

MT. LAKE PARK

Under the provisions of the charter of the Park, a primary election will be held on July 25 for the purpose of nominating four citizens as candidates for the office of Councilmen. Of the number so nominated, two will be elected at a general election to be held in August.

Under the primary plan, applications for nominations must be filed with the Town Clerk not later than midnight, July 14. No one will be eligible as a candidate whose application is not in the hands of the Clerk on or before the last above date. Blank applications and all information in relation thereto may be had from the Clerk, D. B. Martin, at the store of Martin and Son.

Camp Meeting

On schedule, the Mountain Lake Park Camp Meeting opened on June 30 with an array of evangelistic talent and up to the time this is being written the general verdict is "there has not been one barren service."

The fiftieth jubilee service began on last Sunday afternoon. Mr. J. A. Enfow, an outstanding figure in the religious activities of the Park, gave a brief but graphic history of the first thirty-five years of the meeting, recalling the many eminent divines and laymen who during that time contributed largely to the success of the undertaking. None is more qualified than Mr. Enlow for he has been identified with the meetings and the Park since it was carved out of the wilderness. He was followed by Mr. C. M. Hood, who gave a history of the enterprise for the past twelve years, or since he has been president. Under his leadership the Camp Meeting association was formed and now it has a membership of approximately 800 distributed in many states.

A pleasing feature of the services occurred at the conclusion of Mr. Hood's talk, when Rev. W. M. Castle appeared at the head of a large number of young people, whom, he predicted, would enter largely into the activities of the association and make of it a splendid success for the next fifty years.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson L. Camden had as their week-end guest, Mrs. W. T. Plymale, Washington, D. C. She returned to her home Sunday accompanied by Mrs. Camden who will spend a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Plymale at the Lafayette hotel, of which Mr. Plymale is manager.

Miss Betty Morgan daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John O. Morgan, is spending a few days in Keyser, W. Va., a guest in the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Kimmell.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Roussie, Washington, D. C., who are spending a few weeks at Berkeley Springs, W. Va., motored to the Park Tuesday and they were so impressed with the surroundings that they will return in August for a month's stay.

Notice of the assessment of property for the present year has been posted at the Postoffice and other places in the Park by the Town Clerk. Persons feeling aggrieved will have an opportunity to file protests on July 26 and 27, between 9 and 12 and 1 and 5, when council will sit for that purpose.

St. Matthew's Episcopal church is maintaining a free bus service from the Park each Sunday for those who desire to attend church. The bus is to leave Schrock cottage at 10:35; Mt. Lake hotel at 10:40; Allenhurst 10:43; and Bracthorn at 10:45.

Mr. Walter W. Pollard, Jr., Baltimore, spent the holidays with his family, who are spending a portion of the summer with Mrs. Pollard's parents, Major and Mrs. W. N. Skyles. Master Weir III, who has been ill for the past ten days, has recovered.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred C. Fleming and Mrs. Allie Haymond motored to Fairmont where they will spend a few days.

It is hard to understand the spirit of vandalism which prompted the breaking of a number of panes of glass in the windows of the postoffie building. A spirit of decency and of pride should prompt everyone from maliciously destroying property. Discovery of the vandals should be followed by prompt prosecution.

General and Mrs. Melville Jarvis, who have been occupying their cottage for the past two weks, left today for Clarksburg, W. Va., the former home of Mrs. Jarvis, where they will spend a few days before leaving for Europe.

Miss Beatrice Clary, Hagerstown, spent the Fourth with her mother, Mrs. Alma Bell.

Mr. Richard Grimes, Pittsburgh, is the guest of his brother and sister-in law, Mr. and Mrs. Bushrod Grimes.

Mr. Stelle Trotter, Charleston, W. Va., was a visitor here last week.

Mrs. Laura Simpson, of Cincinnati, has opened her cottage for the season.

Mr. W. D. Searle, Washington, D. C., motored here and spent the holidays with his family.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Smouse, of Fairmont, former residents, spent the Fourth with Mrs. Smouse's sisters, the Misses Hamill.

Mrs. W. D. Grimes, of the Mt. Lake Hotel, has been ill for the past week.

Mrs. George Beamer and Misses Edna and Ruth Beamer, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Mrs. Harry Searls and Roy Beamer, of Memphis, Tenn., are visiting the former's daughter, Mrs. J. A. Turney, at her home in the Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Haymond Rapp, of Clarksburg, were the guests of General and Mrs. Jarvis on Saturday.

The Misses Flora and Emily Bolgiano, Alfred Bolgiano, Joseph Harlan, William Miller, John Cristaff and Edwin Filler, all of Baltimore, were week-end visitors of Mrs. Charles J. Bolgiano.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Ammann, of Washington, spent the Fourth with Major and Mrs. Skyles, the latter a sister of Mrs. Ammann.

Bar Association Elects Officers

A meeting of the members of the Garrett County Bar Association was held yesterday when the following officers were chosen for the year: President, E. Ray Jones; vice-president, W. W. Dawson; secretary and treasurer, Neil C. Fraley. S. F. Hamill, the retiring president, will have as his guests at a dinner at Table Rock Inn on Monday evening, July 18, the members of the association.

The annual vacation of the attorneys will begin July 13 and last until August 13, with office hours in the forenoon only.

A committee to draft resolutions on the death of the late E. Z. Tower was appointed the resolutions to be presented to the court in September.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving remembrance of our dear mother, Mrs. J. Bunnel Friend, who died one year ago today, July 7, 1931:

One year has passed since that sad day
The one we loved was called away;
God took her home, it was His will,
But in our hearts she liveth still.
Dear mother, you are not forgotten,
Though on earth you are no more—
Still in memory you are with us
As you always were before.

We cherish the memory of her so dear,
We ofttimes shed a bitter tear—
It is only those who have loved and lost
That know the bitter, bitter cost.

—BY HER FAMILY.

GREEN GLADE

Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Shank and children, Washington, Pa., spent the week-end here visiting friends and relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Longo, Westernport, were visiting the latter's parents here Sunday.

Miss Nellie Wagner spent the week-end with Mrs. E. J. Shank.

Among those who spent the Fourth at Hazelhurst were C. A. Olson, Cumberland; Mr. and Mrs. Lee Allen, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Sheetz, Mr. and Mrs. Kolkhorst, Dr. Wolvertone and family, Mr. and Mrs. James Allen, Mr. Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. Fisher, all of Keyser; Mr. and Mrs. Fredlock, Howard and Frank Dixon, Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Felhing, Piedmont; Clarence and Ruth Howard, Bloomington, and members of both the Green Glade and the Owl's clubs.

Beyond the County

In Washington last week, the first "bonus baby" was born. The child first saw light in a hospital, to which the mother had been removed from the camp.

At Athens, Ga., two students, both farm boys dwelling in tents and cooking for themselves, held the cost of food down to $7.50 a month for both.

In Shanghai, China, the last shipment of China's 400,000-ton order of American wheat has just been discharged from the hold of a steamer.

At Hagerstown is located the oldest state-chartered bank in Maryland. It is the Hagerstown Bank & Trust company, formed in 1807, and which this year is celebrating its 125th anniversary.

At Auburn, N. Y., a paroled convict presented himself at the prison gates and informed the warden that he was hroke and hungry and had hitch-hiked from Ohio, asked to be taken in, which was finally done. State authorities authorized his re-arrest for violating his parole.

In New York, the Red-Headed Society which used to stage an annual meeting for red-headed women has disbanded, claiming the number has grown too big, because the color now comes out of a bottle instead of being bestowed by nature.

The chorus will be composed of men and boys from all parts of the Tableland area. Many are planning to come to the Park and picnic for the day, according to I. S. Middaugh, director of Mountain Lake Instiute.

Truck Loaded With Sugar Is Consumed By Fire On Monday

A Dodge truck owned by Charles R. Pollock, Uniontown, Pa., loaded with six tons of sugar, caught fire while descending Cove hill on route 37 on Monday morning about 10:30 and both truck and contents were entirely destroyed.

The truck was enroute from Philadelphia to the Friendsville Milling company. When the fire was discovered the driver turned the machine into the bank near Fisher's store and barely had time to escape from the wreckage before the flames enveloped the eab. A companion of the driver also escaped lnjury.

The truck was insured but the amount does not cover the loss, it was stated.

SCOUT SAVES GIRL ABOUT TO DROWN IN DEEP CREEK

Had Gone Down Six Times But Had Not Swallowed Much Water

Once again a boy scout's training has been responsible for saving a life, according to Elmer Haulenbeek, proprietor of Rainbow Inn, on Deep Creek Lake, eight miles north of Oakland.

Jean Bishop, 21, of Johnstown, Pa., a member of a camping party along Deep Creek, was being taught to swim. She got into deep water, becamc frightcned and went down. She went under six times, having presence of mind to take a breath each time she came to the surface. The sixth time she was practically exhausted and swallowed a lot of water, and would have drowned, had not assistance come.

Marshall Jones, a scout from the Clarksburg council, now encamped at Rainbow Inn, was in a rowboat at the time. He jumped into the water with his clothes on and swam toward the girl just as she was going down for the sixth time. A little push was all that was necessary to send her close to shore, so that she eould touch bottom, and the danger was over.

Jones was awarded an extra week in camp, free of charge, and the girl whom he saved will see that he gets to stay another week, making two weeks extra in camp.

PIONEER JUBILEE TO BE AT MT. STORM ON JULY 30

Old-time Sports and Other Contests To Be Held Thruout Day

Included in the pageants, music festivals, etc., of the Tableland area this season is the Allegheny Pioneer Jubilee, which is to be held at Mt. Storm, W. Va., about twenty-five miles southeast of Oakland, on Route 50, Saturday, July 30.

The celebration will include the dramatization of the coming of the eastern eattlemen to make their trades at the crossroads there and the surveying of the Northwestern Turnpike, Route 50, by Louis Croiset, an engineer of Napolean's army, who laid out the Winchester-to-Parkersburg highway, will be reproduced. There will also be pioneer sports throughout the day, a rifle shoot, using every kind of rifle from the muzzle loader to the modern type of firearms, and a pageant in the evening.

Early pioneer weaving and Indian relics will be on display and there will be numerous contests.

In order to meet the obligation on the community building erected there several years ago, all the farmers of the section are bringing fresh farm produets to Mount Storm that day, and the money derived from the sales will go toward liquidating the indebtedness.

Officers To Be Installed.

Installation of officers will be held at the regular meeting of the local lodge Knights of Pythias tomorrow evening in Castle Hall, Third street. The officers were elected early in June.

Those to be installed include Stanley Stahl, chancellor commander; Lee R. Mason, vice chancellor; Playford Ramsey, prelate; Stanley Bond, master of work; Gladstone Morris, master at arms; David Walter, master of finance; Walter Hardesty, keeper of records and seal; C. F. White, inner guard; Wilson White, outer guard.

Following the installation ceremony preliminary plans for the annual Labor Day picnic will be made.

Bean Lodges In Child's Bronchial Tube; Extracted in Baltimore Hospital

The two-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd "Mac" Tasker was near death on Tuesday night as the result of a bean becoming lodged in her bronchial tube.

When no local physician could be obtained, Dr. George E. Clarke, health officer, was called, who revived the child and advised that she be rushed to a hospital. She was taken by her parents to Keyser and then on to Cumberland where in both cases it was found that no facilities for removing objects from the bronchial tube were at hand and the nurse and surgeon who had been called at Cumberland went with the child and her parents to Baltimore where at the University Hospital the bean was successfully extracted.

When asked what the charges would be for his assistance the Cumberland surgeon replied: "The bean and the price of the gasoline used in bringing us to Baltimore."

CERTIFIED SEED GROWERS UNABLE TO MEET DEMAND

All State Certified Potato Stock Has Been Sold at Better Than Average Prices

CERTIFY 65,948 BUSHELS

In striking contrast with growers of other agricultural commodities, Maryland certified seed potato growers this year were unable to supply enough stoek to meet the demand and received considerably more than the market price for their product, according to Dr. R. A. Jehle, specialist in plant pathology at the University of Maryland.

Dr. Jehle states that 65,948 bushels of potatoes, the largest quantity ever certified in the State, were eligible for certification this year. Of this amount, 49,685 bushels were of the cobbler variety and were second crop potatoes grown in Worcester and Somerset counties. Practieally all of the remainder of the seed was grown in Garrett county.

Approximately 20,000 bushels of the second crop were sold in New Jersey, Maryland, and Virginia, the average price received being $2 for an eleven peck barrel, or fifty cents more than the average price for uncertified seed. It is stated that the demand exceeded the supply of this seed. Many of the fields in New Jersey planted with these potatoes were visited by Dr. Jehle, who said they were practically free from disease and were the best looking potatoes he saw in that State. The growers were well pleased with the stock and want more next year.

Of the Garrett county crop, approximately 8,000 bushels were sold to West Virginia growers who paid seventy-five cents a bushel for it, twenty-five cents above the price for uncertificd seed. Fourteen bushels of the Garrett stock were planted in Frederick county.

In several instances, according to Dr. Jehle, growers planted home grown stock along side of the certified potatoes from Garrett county, but found to their regret that the yield from the home grown stock was from twenty-five to fifty per cent less.

Institution Closed Since December, Now Operating With New Officers Chosen Tuesday

WM. L. THOMAS, CASHIER

With a new board of directors and new officers in charge of its affairs, the First State Bank, at Grantsville, which ceased to function in December of last year, caused by heavy withdrawals of funds on deposit, was reorganized Tuesday following its reopening on the 6th inst under the former board.

A meeting of the stockholders of the bank was held on Tuesday afternoon at W. O. W. Hall, Grantsville, when 2298 shares of the 2500 shares of the bank were represented in person or by proxy by the 135 men and women in attendance.

E. R. Jones, of Oakland, was chairman of the meeting and after stating its object and ascertaining that a majority of the stock was represented a board of directors consisting of 11 men was elected as follows:

Dr. N. R. Davis, C. E. Ellithorp, H. P. Miller, Otho S. Fike, Wm. Winterberg, S. S. Miller, Joel A. Beachy, Stewart Rodamer, F. W. Bender, G. W. Diefenbach and E. R. Jones.

Immediatcly following the meeting of stockholders and election of the board of directors a meeting of the latter was held at which the following officers were elected to serve until early in 1933:

The bank under its new board and executives, has a most promising future and the fact that it has reopened has greatly heartened the people interested.

Runs Into Culvert With Car

While driving the automobile owned by Mrs. Harry Clayton, of Mountain Lake Park along Third street about 4:30 o'clock Monday afternoon, E. C. Frame struck a culvert head, slightly injuring the occupants of the car and damaging the front bumper and radiator of the machine. Mr. Frame was thrown against the steering apparatus and suffered bruises, while Mrs. Clayton was severely shaken up.

Firemen Called Early Sunday Morning

The Oakland Volunteer Fire Department was called about 12:45 on Sunday morning to extinguish a blaze in the barn opposite the Giessman Hotel on Third street. This is the second attempt in recent weeks to burn this building, but it has been discovered in its incipiency upon each occasion with but slight damage resulting.

COUNTY'S FIRST FAMILY OF CLIFF DWELLERS FOUND AT ROCK CAMP; EXPECT TO REMAIN THERE UNTIL FALL

Having no Home Mother Takes Five Children to Mountain Fastness on Snaggy Mountain

HAVE RIGGED UP SHELTER

What is believed to be the first original family of cliff dwellers of Garrett county has been discovered less than eleven miles from Oakland.

In a place formerly known as "Rock Camp," on Snaggy mountain, where Meshack Browning was known to camp often during his pioneer hunting days, and which was one of the show places of Garrett county in the days of the horse and buggy, a family has come to dwell beneath the sheltering overhanging rocks, a miles and a half from any road, and near the top of the mountain.

Forced to seek another sheler when they were discovered "squatting" on a farm which the owner is now occupying, Mabel (the last name is unnecessary) and her five children decided on the location of their new home, and with the help of her brother Arthur, they moved in two weeks ago.

The best of it is they like it. They have a room about 12 by 20 feet, with a rock ceiling seven feet above them. The two ends and one side have been built up as a cabin, with a door at the upper end and a stone fireplace at the lower. Two beds fashioned with logs, an old table, a log bench, and box cupboards for what little food they have, and one or two repaired chairs complete the furnishings.

To keep out the rain they have used old rugs, awnings, window blinds and heavy paper.

While waiting for better times the mother is not loafing. She wants to remain in her rock home until blackberrics are ripe and she is able to can them for next winter's food. Her brother, in the meantime, has a garden planted which is expected to yield food for the cold winter days ahead. What little work he can find at present provides enough money to keep them supplied with the bare necessities of life.

Mabel is 38 years old and her children, Jim, Claude, Mabel, Marion, Madaline, are 17 years to 6 months. Her husband disappeared more than a year ago, leaving them no means of support. But they are making the best of it, and when asked if she would rather be moved to some house if it eould be arranged, she replied that she was comfortable there and would rather not leave until after the blackberries were ripe.

Keeping clean is a hard job, but with water within a stone's throw of Rock Camp, this difficulty is being overcome as much as is possible. And when it came to posing for pictures, they were just as human as the rest of us and smiled gayly for Dr. George E. Clarke, health officer, when he pressed the button.

FORMATION OF THE CIVIC CLUB TOLD AT LUNCHEON

Miss Thekla Fundenberg, First President, Delivers Principal Address Last Thursday

LIST CHARTER MEMBERS

Something of the formation and the first days of the Oakland Civic Club were related by Miss Thekla Fundenberg, its first president, at the luncheon last Thursday afternoon in celebration of the twenty-first anniversary of the organization.

With the object in mind of making the town clean twenty-three women formed the club at a meeting called for the purpose on March 31, 1911, and their project ended in a rubbish parade in which wagon loads of dirt and trash were hauled away and disposed of.

Cleaning and beautifying the cemetery was the next project undertaken and the stone wall and iron gates at the entrance were the result. Following this the members of the Civic Club helped in organizing and maintaining the library, cooperated with the public health authorities, the Red Cross and later assisted in orthopedic work and in contributing to the beauty of the town by sponsoring yard and garden contests and making the old Oakland Hotel grounds a public park.

From the minute book of the organization comes the information about the first meeting, which is dated March 31, 1911:

In answer to a general eall, twenty-three ladies of Oakland met at the Court House for the purpose of organizing a Civie Club. Miss Thekla Fundenberg was elected president; Mrs. E. H. Sincell, vice-president; Mrs. L. T. Waters, secretary, and Mrs. J. C. Renninger, treasurer.

Committees were appointed as follows:

Municipal, Mrs. M. C. Hinebaugh; cemetery, Mrs. E. Mitchell; sanitary, Mrs. C. E. Offutt, publicity, Mrs. B. H. Sincell.

Charter Members

The charter members of the Club included Mrs. Richard Connell, Mrs. Herman Creutzburg, Mrs. King Delawder, Miss Thekla Fundenberg, Mrs. J. E. Harned, Mrs. M. C. Hinebaugh, Mrs. C. B. Johnson, Miss Grace Jones, Miss Lottie Loar, Mrs. E. Mitchell, Mrs. Elwood Offutt, Mrs. G. A. Porter, Mrs. J. L. Pollock, Mrs. W. D. Reed, Mrs. J. C. Renninger, Mrs. B. H. Sincell, Mrs. E. H. Sincell, Mrs. H. C. Sincell, Mrs. R. E. Sliger, Mrs. L. T. Waters, Mrs. E. I. West, Mrs. G. R. Williamson and Mrs. James Willison.

Twenty-two men were elected as honorary members of the Club.

Mrs. R. E. Sliger read the names of the charter members at the luncheon.

Those who served as presidents during the years of its activities were Miss Fundenberg, Mrs. E. H. Sincell, Mrs. E. Z. Tower, Mrs. R. E. Sliger, Mrs. James L. Pollock, Mrs. J. C. Renninger, Mrs. James Willison, Mrs. Paul Naylor, Mrs. Milton Sincell and the present head of the Club, Miss Lottie Loar.

Miss Fundenberg, in her address, spoke of the untiring efforts of the members of the club to raise funds for various projects, and named many members who had assisted throughout the years. In conclusion she stated:

"Always remember, no matter what you are called upon to do in any kind of service work, that you are more than repaid in seeing your object accomplished, making pleasant friends and happy memories."

INCENDIARISM IS BLAMED FOR RECENT BLAZE HERE

Three Held for Questioning in County Jail—Another Being Held in Uniontown Jail

SAID TO HAVE CONFESSED

Three are being held in the Garrett county jail, another is being held in Uniontown, Pa., and two others may be implicated as a result of the early morning fire at the property, corner of Fifth and Alder streets, on June 16, which was said to be of incendiary origin.

The three being held in the Garrett county jail, Sam Picquadio, Martin Jubic and Louis Wisilosky, all of Connellsville, Pa., are said to have confessed to their part in the crime and it is alleged that they have implicated a fourth party, Tony Bromeio, also of Connellsville, who is at present in the jail at Uniontown. He would not waive extradition, but a requisition for extradition papers has been sent to Governor Ritchie by State's Attorney Walter W. Dawson, and it is possible that he will be brought here for a hearing.

It is understood that Bromeio, the alleged head of the "gang," knows the principal or principals who paid for having the fire set.

After the fire had been extinguished the morning of the 16th Emroy Bolden, one of the firemen, discovered a can and some cloth which had been soaked with gasoline. While investigating the case a county detective and district attorney from Fayette county, Pa., were questioning Sam Picquadio, who had been apprehended on the charge of robbing a filling station. Two tires on his car had just been bought recently from Ray Teets' garage, Oakland, and further questioning brought out the fact of the reason of their visit.

The other two were then implicaed and all three in turn are said to have implicated the fourth. That the fourth person would also have some interesting information was predicted by county authorities. A hearing is to be held soon.

In the alleged confession it was said to be stated that the fire had been started by a candle. When the candle burned low it ignited the gasoline soaked rags and these in turn ignited the stairway. The poor ventilation and lack of draft were said to have been the cause of delaying the start of the fire until after daylight. The plans evidently had been to have it is ashes before that time.

The record title for the property is in the name of George H. Barron, of Rockwood, Pa., and the vendor's lien is held by J. Victor Shartzer, of Connellsville.

Local Organizations Win Prizes at State Firemen's Convention

The Gilbert-Brown Boys' Band of Oakland won first prize among six other bands in the parade at the State Firemen's Convention at Frostburg on Friday afternoon.

The Oakland Volunteer Fire department won second place among the many fire companies in line of march.

The Boys' Band will receive approximately $100, and the Fire department $50 as a result of the decisions.

Narrowly Escape Injury

John and Thomas Browning, aged 4 and 2, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Cheston Browning of Oakland, narrowly escaped injury and possibly death on Wednesday morning when they loosened the brake of an automobile parked in front of their home, which started in motion down a hill backward. The machine struck against a cement walk which deflected its course and it then ran into a tree, bringing it to a stop. Neither of the boys were injured and the car was only slightly damaged.

Bar Vacation Starts on July 18

Beginning Monday, July 18, and continuing until August 13, inclusive, members of the Garrett County Bar Association will take their annual vacation in the afternoons with office hours in the fornoons only.

All those having business with the attorneys are asked to call during the morning hours of the above dates.

S. F. Hamill, the retiring president of the Association, will have the other members as his guests at a dinner at Table Rock Inn on Monday evening, July 18.

I never believed before this that Doc Clarke was in the field artillery during the war. But Tuesday afternoon, going to a place where we expected to find rattlers and perhaps a bear or two, Doc took his .45 and we both wore boots (mine with spurs attached). Not finding any booty we put a target against a tree and walked back twenty paces. Doc fired three shots which convinced me that he was used to firing big cannons.

And then I shot. And did I tear that target to pieces? Did I hit the bull's eye, and show him what a piker he was? Did I? I did not. My R. O. T. C. training as a pilot in the cavalry had failed me.

Although the aroma arising from numerous bottles left in the City hall from the recent celebration reminds one of a brewery, the firemen are emphatic in stating that the smell comes from a foamite extinguishing fluid that they have been testing recently. Put to the test and found wanted.

American Etiquette—1884

Did you ever read "American Etiquette and Rules of Politeness," a social handbook published in 1884? Neither did I, but I read some rules gathered by Clay Miller, of Spencer, W. Va., who did.

It contains, he says, 38 chapters covering everything from courtship to the funeral, recipes for removing dandruff, beautifying the teeth and softening corns. It warns girls against speaking to strange men and tells the young swain he should woo gently but firmly.

Just glance at a few rules. The parenthetical expressions do not belong to 1884.

In case a gentleman is introduced to a lady, both should bow slightly, and it is the duty of the gentleman to start a conversation. (If he gets the chance.)

By all means avoid the habits of swearing, drinking and card playing. (How about Flinch and Old Maid?)

The "Cut" is given by a continued stare at a person. (Or by telling him to go to the devil.)

While much discretion must be used on the part of ladies in shaking hands with gentlemen, it nevertheless shows a good spirit, and where the surroundings are as they should be, no danger is likely to arise from such a custom. (But you can't be too careful.)

The etiquette of hand shaking is simple. A man has no right to take a lady's hand until it is offered, and has even less right to pinch or retain it. (Or bite it.)

The kiss is the most affectionate form of salutation and is only proper among near relatives and dear friends. (I've got a million of 'em.)

Raw oysters are eaten with a fork. (If at all.)

No gentleman is ever guilty of standing in public places and offensively gazing at ladies as they pass. (Guilty of what?)

In dancing a round dance, a gentleman should never place a lady's hand at his back, on his hip, or in the air, but gracefully by his side. (What if you are ticklish?)

Usually a married couple do not dance together in society. (Or anywhere else.)

Use a napkin only for your mouth. Never use it for your nose, face or forehead. (Or ears.)

You should never expectorate, snuff, nor hawk in society. (The floor might leak.)

Keep the breath sweet and pure. Onions should not be eaten because of their offensiveness to the breath. (Love me love my onions.)

Never pick your teeth, clean your nails, scratch you head or pick your nose in company. (Mine bleeds so easily anyway.)

A warm bath should be taken at least once each week. (That must have been before B. O.)

The best material for a bathing costume is flannel, and the most suitable color is gray, and may be trimmed with bright worsted braid. The loose sacque or the yoke waist, both to be belted in, and falling about midway between the knee and ankle, is the best form of bathing costume. An oil-skin cap to protect the hair from the water, and merino socks to match the dress complete the costume. (What! no underskirt?)

The sports editor, in speaking of the Democratic National Convention, said it looked to him like Smith and Ritchie had gone out on a double play, Garner, to McAdoo to Roosevelt.

CONGRATULATIONS—

The Republican congratulates the Gilbert-Brown Boys Band for winning first prize at the State Firemen's Convention and the local fire department upon winning second place for its equipment.

Oakland should appreciate the worthwhileness of these two premier organizations.

IN DAYS OF OLD

FORTY YEARS AGO

Hotels and cottages at Mountain Lake Park were enjoying good patronage due to the camp meeting. Registers at the hotels showed the following number as guests: Grace Hotel, 100; Fallon Cottage, 30; Allegany House, 45; Faith Home, 30; Mountain Lake Hotel, 120; Rosemont Cottage, 20; Assembly House, 120, and from two to six guests being privately entertained at many of the cottages.

One of the houses owned by William Hall, located on Fourth street and occupied by John Collins and family, was destroyed by fire. An alarm was sounded and the "bucket brigade" responded but water was scarce and the building of wood was soon reduced to a heap of ashes.

The streets of the town were greatly improved by Commissioner Coddington. A decided improvement was also noted in the new platform on the south side of Liberty street, between Wilson and Main streets.

Howard McRobie, employed at a stone crusher near town, had his hand badly mashed when it was caught between a running rope and a wheel of the crusher.

TWENTY YEARS AGO

Representatives of an ocean-to-ocean highway association were in the county fostering public sentiment and enlisting workers in the cause. They were from Los Angeles, Cal., having come across the country by automobile.

The Mountain City Band of Oakland gave a concert in the Mountain Lake Park auditorium.

Mrs. Parley DeBerry and Mrs. C. A. Miller, Terra Alta, walked from their home to Oakland in three hours with the mercury hovering around 80. They returned on the train the same afternoon.

Milton B. Miller, Grantsville, returning from a picnic at Accident, had his buggy slightly damaged by Clarence Ringer, who ran into it with his automobile.

Lesson for July 17

THE PASSOVER

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 11:1-12:36.
GOLDEN TEXT—Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us.—I Corinthians 5:7.
PRIMARY TOPIC—God Saving His People.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The First Passover.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Memorial Feast.
TOPIC FOR YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS—Leader, Liberator and Lawgiver.

I. The Passover Instituted (vv. 1-23).

1. The date (v. 2). With the institution of the Passover came a change in the order of time. The common year was rolling on as usual, but with reference to God's chosen people, the order was interrupted and everything was made to date from this event. The time of one's salvation is the real beginning of time and life for the one redeemed.

2. The lamb set apart (vv. 3-5). This lamb must be a male without blemish, indicating that it must be both representative and perfect.

3. The lamb was killed by the whole congregation (v. 6). This shows that it was not for the individual only, but for the entire assembly. The setting apart of the lamb was not sufficient—it must be killed, for "without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins."

4. The blood of the slain lamb was to be placed upon the side posts and lintels of the door (v. 7). When the destroying angel went through the land he passed over the houses where the door posts were sprinkled with blood (v. 33). The blood on the posts and lintels was the ground of peace.

5. Israel feeding upon the lamb (vv. 8-10). This denotes fellowship. Judgment preceded feasting. The lamb roasted signified the action of fire in God's judgment at the cross. The head, the legs, and purtenance thereof show that in the substitutionary sacrifice the understanding, the walk, and all that pertains thereto are involved. This shows that the atonement of Jesus Christ involved his obedience to law as well as his suffering in the stead of his own. The eating of unleavened bread signifies that no sin can enter into fellowship with Christ. Leaven signifies corruption (I Cor. 5:7, 8). The bitter herbs suggest the bitterness of Christ's sufferings. His sufferings were not mainly physical, but moral and spiritual.

6. They ate the passover ready for action (v. 11). They went forth with a staff in hand, shoes on their feet, and with girded loins. The girding of the loins betokened separation from sin and preparation and readiness for service. The fact of being shod indicated their willingness and readiness to march out of Egypt. The staff in hand indicated their nature as pilgrims, leaning upon a support outside of themselves. They were to leave behind them the place of death and darkness and march to the promised land.

7. The uncircumcised denied participation in the feast (vv. 43-49). Circumcision was typical of regeneration. The significance of the requirement is that only those who have become new creatures by the power of the cross have a right to sit at the Passover feast. Only the regenerated have fellowship with Christ.

II. The Significance of the Passover (vv. 24-28).

It was a memorial institution calling to mind the deliverance of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage.

III. The Awful Judgment (vv. 28, 30).

At midnight the Lord smote all the firstborn in the land from the firstborn of Pharaoh that sat on his throne unto the firstborn of the captive that was in bondage, even the firstborn of the cattle. There was death that night in every home throughout Egypt where the blood was not found. A great and awful cry went up from the Egyptians. This is typical of the coming day of God's wrath when all who are not resting under the shadow of the blood of Christ shall perish.

IV. The Great Deliverance (vv. 31-36).

So mighty was this stroke that Pharaoh called for Moses in the night and requested him to be gone with his flocks and herds. The Israelites made ready for their journey. They demanded of the Egyptians jewels of silver, and gold, and raiment. The word "borrow" in verse 35 means "demand" instead of the sense in which we use it today. It was just on the part of the Israelites, who had served the Egyptians so long, to demand now some compensation.

The Big Lake in Maryland's Mountains

THOUGH LITTLE KNOWN IN OTHER SECTIONS OF THE STATE, DEEP CREEK HAS MANY ADMIRERS

By STUART GIBSON
In the Baltimore Sunday Sun, July 10, 1932.

While Grover Cleveland was President a group of Washington sportsmen who had found for themselves a secluded camp site on a first-class and little known trout stream in Garrett county invited him to be their guest. The President accepted, and whipped the creek and little natural lake which lay below the camp, and consequently the sportsmen, gratified by his visit, named their lake in his honor. For years after that Lake Cleveland remained in seclusion on Deep Creek, and nobody thought that one day it would form part of the second largest artificially formed body of water in the United States.

But this is what happened. Deep Creek Lake grew out of that small, isolated pond. Now it has a sixty-seven-mile shore line and is more than twelve miles long. Its greatest depth is some sixty-five feet and in places it is nearly a mile wide. Into it flow not only the creek from which it gets its name, but Red Run, Cherry Run and a dozen other mountain streams. Power from its impounded waters provides electricity for a city, its spillways help to swell a northward-flowing river and its mountainous surroundings lend it an unusually beauty. But a great majority of Marylanders apparently it still is as little known as when President Cleveland waded the stream bed that now lies sixty-five feet under water.

The lake, however, is not without honor save in its own country. Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia have discovered it. Pittsburgh fishermen and hunters are familiar with it and the surrounding mountains. Boy Scouts from that city have a permanent camp on the lake shore, which is used by a dozen troops in summer. A religious order is building a large camp for use of its brethren. Masons of Pittsburgh have acquired a large tract of land for use as a game preserve, and many West Virginians have bought building sites on the banks of the lake. There are, of course, many Marylanders who have come to know Deep Creek, some of them intimately; but somewhat to the distress of Swepson Earle, Maryland Conservation Commissioner, and others interested in developing the natural opportunities for sportsmen and nature-lovers, the lake is far more familiar to those from other States than to residents of Maryland.

The lake came into being in 1925, when the dam impounding its waters was completed at a cost of between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000. Through an arrangement with the company which built it to obtain hydro-electric power for Johnstown, Pa., the Conservation Commission was given the right to stock the lake with fish and police control over the shore line. Private property rights do not include the actutal shore, but use of the riparian rights under the direction of the commission is not restricted save in a very general sense. Since the completion of the dam a forest preserve, game sanctuary and fish hatchery have been established in the nearby mountains, and the State Roads Commission now is completing a series of rebuilding operations which will result in a ribbon of first-class road over the mountains.

From the standpoint of the fisherman, Mr. Earle's figures are thrilling. Six hundred thousand pike have been put into the lake, and this spring 5,500 rainbow trout were released there. Several thousand small-mouthed black bass have been added to the store of finny residents, and, in addition, all of the mountain streams which feed into the lake are "natural" trout streams, so that their denizens, too, find their way into the lake and provide sport in the streams above. There is one difficulty—also a "natural" one. From one of the streams have come a quantity of rock-bass, small, prolific and annoying to anybody who drops a line or casts a plug. Because of the small size of these fish the black bass find food aplenty at present. But the bass are multiplying rapidly, and so are the pike. The commission is depending on the larger fish for the elimination of the rock-bass. And then Deep Creek Lake ought to be close to perfection for the angler.

In the wooded hills and the slopes of Meadow Mountain and Roman Nose Mountain, which force the lake into odd bends and sweeping curves that cover 4,500 acres, there are deer and wild turkeys, and great coveys of grouse. Occasionally a bear is reported, and one weighing 400 pounds fell victim to a hunter only a year ago. Reports, too, indicate that now and again there are panthers remaining, despite the approach of civilization in these wild hills. To the man who likes to take to the field there is promise of plenty of game.

Maryland's Department of Forestry maintains three great forest reserves in Garrett county, all within a few miles of the lake. The nearest of these lies in the foothills of Snaggy Mountain, west of the Youghiogheny, and meets the tract owned by the Pittsburgh Masons. This tract, incidentally, has been turned over to Maryland for maintenance, although the deed remains with the Pittsburghers.

In the Maryland area, known as the Swallow Falls reserve, are 4,596 acres of woodland. Far larger, however, is the reserve northeast of the lake. This lies on the slopes of Meadow Mountain and Big Savage Mountain, and covers an area of 16,328 acres. This tract occupies a large part of the watershed of Savage River, which meets the north branch of the Potomac near Westernport. The third area lies southeast of the lake, below Kitzmiller. It is on the Potomac River and covers 6,072 acres.

Camping is encouraged in the forest areas under permits from the Forestry Department. Casual picnickers require no permit, the only request being that fire prevention precautions be taken.

Experimental work is being carried out in the forest preserves, the object of which is not merely the maintenance of woodlands but the development of timber. As yet the work is not in such an advanced state that wide timber operations are feasible, but the plan is eventually to cut out fully grown timber and use methods of reforestation to maintain the woodlands in a productive state. Meantime, of course, the matter of providing recreations grounds is an important factor.

West of the lake the Youghiogheny River flows—to the north, which in itself is something of a surprise to Marylanders this side of the Blue Ridge chain, who are accustomed to seeing watercourses moving southward or southeast. Most of the mountain streams which feed the lake flow southwestward. But the dam which impounds them lies at the northern end of the lake. Its spillways overflow into the Youghiogheny, so that the southwestward streams turn north into the river eventually. The river, making a huge, slow bend to the northwest, eventually reaches McKeesport, where there is a confluence with the Monongahela. Ten miles further the waters merge with the Allegheny River.

And then, surprisingly, the streams turn almost upon themselves and together move southward as the Ohio River. So at last the waters of the lake reach the Gulf of Mexico, while only a few miles eastward there are streams reaching the Chesapeake Bay and the Atlantic. Indeed, at Deer Park, a resort only a few miles from the lake, two springs arise within a short distance of each other. Their neighborliness stops at once, for one moves eastward, the other west, and the rills they form reach the seas thousands of miles apart. Going anywhere by following the course of a stream in Garrett county is likely to prove rather a complicated matter.

Perhaps the most extraordinary complication in which the lake is involved is with regard to Oakland, the Garrett county seat, five miles southwest of it. None of the power generated by the lake is used in Maryland except to illuminate the structures immediately surrounding the lake itself. The power house, indeed, is nine miles beyond the lake to the north. Johnstown, Pa., is the user of the electric current supplied by the lake that lies so near to Garrett's seat of government. Oakland itself gets light and power from a West Virginia power company, and that company derives its power from a lake situated in Pennsylvania.

Deep Creek Lake's water goes on an underground journey from its impound to the power plant. A two-mile tunnel through the mountains contains two six-foot pipes which carry the flow. Since the tunnel descends to an altitude lesser by 250 feet than the lake level, the water it carries is something of a raging torrent by the time the plant is reached.

Scenically the area surrounding the lake perhaps is unsurpassed in Maryland. A Baltimorean traveling to Oakland crosses the entire Blue Ridge chain, moves from ridge to ridge of the foothills that lie west of it, climbs the eastern slopes of the Alleghenies and at last finds himself on the western side of that great range of hills, with an elevation of some 3,000 feet of sea level achieved. The lake itself is 2,500 feet above the sea, and Negro Mountain, highest of the slopes between Baltimore and Oakland, is just over the 3,000-foot mark.

Important as it is from a standpoint of those sports which range through the spring, summer and autumn hunting and fishing seasons, the area in the vicinity of Deep Creek Lake is regarded by those who know it as remarkably situated for winter sports. Last winter Garrett county had little snow until March, when a fall of some fifteen inches came along belatedly and isolated many farmers for a time. As a rule, however, the lake can be depended upon to provide a sheet of ice fifteen inches in thickness, and the temperatures range downward to some 20 degrees below zero. And when it snows in Garrett county the snow stays. Along the roadsides now are rolled up "snow fences," maintained by the State Roads Commission to act as a break against drifts, and in some sections are to be found heavier fences, backed by two-by-four timbers. These, slanted in the fields on either side of the road, serve to bank drifting snow before it reaches the right of way.

Rotary snow plows are called into action as soon as a heavy snow starts, so that seldom are the roads closed. But when the wind sweeps across the mountains there are heavy drifts and the cold usually provides a solid mass on which sledding and skiing really ought to be difficult to avoid, considering the hills in the neighborhood. For although the greater part of Garrett county is tilted in one direction or another, and the mountains and many of the larger hills are timber-covered, there is a great deal of cleared pasture and farm land. To the man unaccustomed to what a Garrett countian sniffs at as a small hill, it is hard enough to stand still on most of this cleared land even if it is knee-deep in daisies or clover. Such a thing as avoiding coasting when there is snow on the ground would seem impossible.

Swallow Falls and Muddy Creek Falls provide an additional spectacular sight, if one tires of rolling mountains and the expanse of the lake. Muddy Creek's cascade is much more imposing than that at Swallow Falls, but the latter holds a special lure for the trout fisherman, and within the last few years its waters provided some thrills for a group of most distinguished and inveterate campers in the country. Harvey F. Firestone, Henry Ford and the late Thomas A. Edison made their temporary home on the bank nearby, to the everlasting gratification of their neighbors.

The town of Oakland itself, with its 2,000 inhabitants and its feeling of paternalism toward the great lake, has been doing a good deal to aid the development of facilities that might draw more people to its neighborhood. A significant point from the geographical angle, of course, is that Garrett county, bound to Maryland only by a slender strip of soil across the mountains, has much more in common with West Virginia and Pennsylvania than with its own State. Just as the Chesapeake Bay does much to provide a natural dividing line for the Eastern Shore from the Western, so do the Alleghenies set Garrett county as something of a land apart.

The county is a member of the Allegheny Tableland Association, composed otherwise of two counties in West Virginia and two in Pennsylvania. They are all in that portion of the Allegheny plateau which begins at the eastern face of the Alleghenies and slips westward to the Laurel Mountains to the west of Garrett county. In that area problems are largely identical. The land is the same and the association consequently is close. Even so, cooperation with the State Conservation Commission in efforts to strengthen the ties between Maryland's westernmost county and other divisions of the State is being emphasized.

Oakland, like many smaller towns, is strong in civic enterprise, and its community spirit is more marked than in many cities of its size. Mayor Grover C. Stemple probably is proudest of the town's volunteer fire department, which boasts first-class pumping equipment—although the Oakland reservoir stands outside the town on a hill high enough to give a gravity flow sufficient to fling water over any structure in the vicinity. It probably is unique in having a waiting list. Oakland Post of the American Legion has a fifty-piece drum and bugle corps and a juvenile group of fifty-four, which is rather startling for a community so small.

Most of the town's social and sports activities touch rather strongly on Deep Creek Lake soon or late. Such a body of water is likely to dominate the activities of those who live anywhere near it.

MT. LAKE PARK

Services in M. E. Church

Church School, 10:00 a. m.; morning Worship, 11:00 a. m. Sermon by Rev. E. T. Mowbray, D, D., of Baltimore, subject, "Respect for Law.

Evening service at 8:00 p. m. Sermon by the pastor, Rev. G. Bleakly, theme, "Christ and demons."

It was certainly a red-letter day for Mt. Lake Park.

Reminiscent of the old days of twenty or twenty-five years ago, when lesser crowds, on special days, were the exception. We refer to last Sunday, when a larger gathering of people attended the camp meeting and songfest than has been here for many years. In fact, to many, the occasion has been referred to as the renaissance and prophetic of what we may expect in the future, if, and when the world regains its sanity.

Those of us whose memories travel back over the past quarter of a century, may well recall crowds of eight to ten thousand, which gathered to listen to Dr. DeWitt Talmage, Sam Jones, Sam Small, William Jennings Bryan, Gen. Charlie Grosvener, Champ Clark and others of National repute, to say nothing of the Swiss Bell Ringers, famous magicians and entertainers, brought here for our edification and spiritual guidance by the Camp Meeting Association and the genial and efficient Dr. Wilbur Davidson. Those were days of prosperity and happiness for the people of the Park and Oakland. When Jake Echard's livery stable was running full blast and his ten or fifteen-seated carry-all hauled happy loads to Allegheny Heights, who climbed the mountain and after gazing to their heart's content on the wonderful panorama, returned to eat of a dandy dinner of fried chicken, home cured ham, and all the 'fixens,' including buckwheat cakes and maple syrup, at the country home at the foot of the hills—and all for a quarter. Those were certainly wonderful days—which may come again to this mountain top. It depends to a large extent on us.

Contrary to report—and we wonder how such reports get started—Silas Wiley, the town bailiff, did not arrest a preacher during the Camp Meeting. The facts of the matter are, that a man from a nearby town, during a tense meeting one evening, felt called upon to go to a section of woodland adjoining the Park and, as he expressed it,"talk to the Lord." He became so enthusiastic and loud, that a number of ladies in that section became alarmed and asked the bailiff to investigate. This he did with the result that the man went back to the meeting in charge of a friend, stayed to the night meeting, and then drove to his home. That's all there was to the incident. Mr. Wiley is not the man to cause one inconvenience or embarrassment, except when the occasion warrants and then he is fearless in the discharge of his duty.

Which reminds us that it will probably be necessary to make examples out of several, who, in the exuberance of the spirit of youth, or of the "spirits" not of youth alone, are committing some acts of wantoness. Sometimes the act committed is more serious. Whether done by some one in the Park, or outsiders, we do not know, but the authorities are determined this must stop.

For instance, the bowling alley building, where Miss Dorothy Welch conducts a tea room, was broken into the other night and a quantity of stores and supplies taken. This was an outrage as Miss Welch had just started in business, and especially during these days of the shortage of money, it is very discouraging. A rigid investigation is being conducted by both town and county authorities. As we have said in this column, it is a physical impossibility for bailiff Wiley to be in more than one place at a time, but from our personal knowledge he is on the job—more in fact than his pay warrants.

If we have been rambling along here on matters in which you are not interested, you may attribute it to the fact that we were in, an automobile accident, and we have been trying ever since to get hold of a good alibi. We believe that is the first thing a driver who has an accident thinks about. But as in 20 years driving experience this is our first, we have not hit on an excuse that sounds reasonable.

Bonus and beer is all we can hear—
They seem to absorb men's attention,

Like peanut parades at a convention.

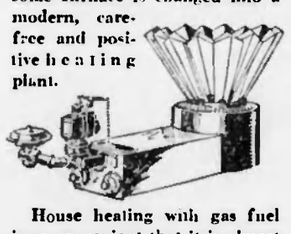
GAS HEAT

Costs less than you think

Change from troublesome coal and ashes to modern gas heat—controlled by your finger tip.

This modern gas burner can be slipped right into your furnace or heating boiler, without any difficulty. Within an hour or two your antiquated, troublesome furnace is changed into a modern, carefree and positive heating plant.



House heating with gas fuel is so convenient that it is almost unbelievable. You light the pilot in the early fall and that is the last time you need go near the heating plant until late spring when you turn off the pilot. You control the gas heat by an automatic thermostat, or room temperature regulator, located conveniently in the hall or living room. A slight touch of the indicator raises or lowers the heat to the desired degree for the entire house.

There is never a foot of gas wasted. The house is never too hot or too cold. Only enough gas is burned to keep the house at the temperature you desire.

Gas Heat is Much Cheaper Than You Think

To get a definite idea of the cost of Gas Heating for your particular home, ask for a Heating Survey. The figures resulting from this survey will furnish a real foundation to judge on. Such figures will include the cost of the proper Heating Plant for your home, cost of installation, and estimate of your fuel requirements.

Nearly 3,000 people were at the Park last Sunday for Future Farmers of America Day. The Future Farmers from organizations throughout the entire state had been encamped at Deep Creek Lake since Friday where a program of activities combining the educational and recreational had been carried out. Sunday morning a worship service was held at the camp in which Rev. C. A. Shilke and Miss Sara B. Huff assisted. After lunch the future farmers went to Mt. Lake Park for the sacred song concert and program sponsored by their state organization. Preceding the program, the Gilbert-Brown Boys' Band of Oakland, played a concert.

Dr. J. D. Blackwell acted as chairman and presented the speakers. Addresses were delivered by Dr. R. A. Pearson, president of the University of Maryland; Dr. L. H. Dennis, department of public instruction of Pennsylvania; and Dr. C. H. Lane, federal adviser for vocational training.

SCOUTS PREPARING FOR SUMMER CAMP ON JULY 31

Assistants Have Been Appointed and 35 Members Will Attend

Preparations for the annual encampment of the Oakland Boy Scout troop are being made, according to members of the troop committee. A meeting will be held within the next few days to complete the list of food and other materials needed for the two weeks' camp which will be held from the afternoon of July 31 to Monday morning, August 15.

Robert Stemple and McClelland Dixon have been appointed as summer assistants at camp to look after swimming activities and passing of some of the tests. Both have their life-saving merit badges and are former Eagle scouts of the troop. Four or five others will be in camp who have passed their life-stving requirements, including Bernard Gonder, Jr., assistant scoutmaster.

Approximately thirty-five scouts are expected to attend the camp. W. Turney will be the camp cook, as in former years.

TWO FARMHOUSES NEAR SWANTON ARE BURNED

Homes of John Tichnell and Fred Friend Destroyed

Two farm homes—those of John Tichnell and Fred Friend—both of which were located in the Swanton section of Garrett county, were completely consumed by fire, along with the major portion of their contents during the latter days of the past week.

The first of the two houses burned was that of John Tichnell, in Walnut Bottom, three miles southeast of Swanton. The fire occurred Wednesday night about 9:30 o'clock during the absence of the family consisting of the parents and five children. The father early in the day had gone to the Green farm to assist in the wheat harvest and later in the day Mrs. Tichnell with the children followed her husband and carried out the plan of camping that night on the shore of Deep Creek Lake, the farm being bordered by that body of water.

Thursday morning a brother of Mr. Tichnell informed him of the destruction of the home, which was the first intimation of his loss.

The house was a comfortable one of eight rooms. In addition to the destruction of the dwelling all the clothing of the family as well as the household furnishings were destroyed.

Fred Friend's home, located six miles southeast of Swanton, burned Thursday morning about nine o'clock. The fire was discovered by a little six-year-old daughter of the family. With no help except that afforded by Mr. Friend, who was at work in a nearby field, and Mrs. Friend, only a portion of the furniture and other goods in the home were saved from destruction. The property was partially covered by insurance.

Fails to Observe "Stop" Sign at Red House; Cars Collide

C. L. Schooley, of Galax, Va., formerly of Thomas, W. Va., struck a Ford car owned and driven by O. M. Burns, of Delaware, when he failed to observe the "Stop" sign at Red House last Saturday. None of the occupants of either car was injured. Schooley was given a hearing before W. A. Gonder, Oakland, justice, and fined $5 and costs for failing to stop.

Milton V. Ruhl, Baltimore, was arrested by Officer Thomas Currie on Tuesday for failing to stop at the Red House crossroads. He was fined $5 and costs before Justice Gonder.

Paul Dawson, of Crellin, was fined $10 and costs for driving without a license on Saturday night and is in the Oakland jail in default of payment.

George Warnick, of Bloomington, was fined $5 and costs bfore Justice Gonder on Monday for passing another car going in the same direction when the way ahead was not clear. Mr. Warnick struck the car of Miss Margaret L. Wilson, of Cumberland, as he attempted to avoid the car driven by Mr. James Treacy, coming south on Second street, near the Oakland Model Bakery. A charge of reckless driving against Miss Wilson was dismissed at the hearing and Mr. Warnick pleaded guilty to his charge. No one was injured, but the right fender of Mr. Warnick's car was damaged.

Large Number Present at Closing Exercises of Bible School

A large audience was present last Sunday evening in the Presbyterian church at the closing exercises of the Daily Vacation Bible school.

Each department of the school gave a dramatic demonstration of the character of work done, and note books and art work were on display. Nineteen girls in the upper grades made a doll in the form of a cat, rabbit, or pig, which will be presented to the Spring Grove orphanage for the children.

The registrations and average attandance was the best ever attained in any previous school.

The school authorities desire to thank the parents for their cooperation as well as the community for making available sufficient funds through the offerings given by the children, and the offerings during the Union Lenten and Holy week services for this work.

Baby Returned Home from Baltimore Hospital Sunday

Betty Jane Tasker, 15-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Tasker, of Oakland, who was taken to a Baltimore hospital a week ago to have a bean removed from her throat, was brought back to her home on Sunday.

The child swallowed the bean on Tuesday and was taken first to Keyser and thence to Cumberland, where the proper instruments for removing the obstruction from her windpipe were not available. She was then taken to Baltimore by Drs. Arthur F. and Emmett L. Jones, Jr. The bean was extracted by Dr. E. A. Looper with the aid of a bronchoscope.

SIXTY-FOUR PASS FIRST INSPECTION OF POTATOES

Eighty-Six Applied for Certification—Number is Increasing Over That Of Last Year

VISIT SPECIAL PLOTS

That 64 of the 86 potato producers of the county who had applied for the certification of seed from the University of Maryland Extension Service had passed the first inspection was announced this morning by John H. Carter, county agent. Nineteen were disqualified on account of numerous diseases, while three were discontined.

The number applying for certification, the number passing the first inspection and the acreage had all been increased over last year's figures, it was stated.

The sixty-four applicants who passed the first inspection have 123 acres planted. Forty-one acres were disqualified and four acres were discontinued.

The number turned down brings out the importance of disease control, which must be practiced more closely by the seed growers if they expect to produce certified seed that will meet the market requirements, Mr. Carter stated.

The second field inspection will be held the first week in August by Dr. Jehle, plant pathologist, and there will be two bin inspections before the seed can be certified.

Besides Dr. Jehle, who was in charge of the work just completed, John W. Heuberger, a graduate of the University of Maryland in this line of work, assisted.

Visits Special Plots

Dr. J. H. Beaumont, head of the horticulture department, University of Maryland, and Dr. Stevenson, U. S. Department of Agriculture, were here Friday and Saturday in connection with the work at the special plots of potatoes planted on the farm of Harry Porter for experimental purposes.

There are 160 varieties of potatoes planted there and while they were in bloom the specialists were experimenting with cross-pollination of the plants in an effort to produce special kinds of varieties adapted to Maryland soil and Maryland climate.

RELIEF WORK IN GARRETT COUNTY MAY SOON CEASE

Service Committee, Lacking Funds, To Withdraw Workers

Emergency relief work, which the American Friends Service Committee has been carrying on in Garrett county for approximately a year, will cease in a few days, the Maryland Children's Aid Society headquarters in Baltimore, was notified.

The American Friends Service Committee, which, with Governor Ritchie's consent, entered the State last year to do relief work in Garrett county, especially among the unemployed miners here, has been carrying much of the county's relief work, devoting its efforts particularly to the feeding of children of the unemployed and the undernourished.

Financial conditions will compel the agency to withdraw from the field when its present food supply is exhausted, the notice said.

Officials of the Maryland's Children's Aid Society, welfare organization, said it, too, soon may have to abandon its work in Garrett county. At the request of the County Commissioners the Society last December undertook to organize relief work in the county, and has been notified by the Commissioners that only $100 per month from their contingent fund can become available for support of this work.

Because no way nas been found for supplementing this sum, the society's relief efforts may have to cease in the near future.

Civic Club to Meet Tuesday

The regular meeting of the Oakland Civic Club will be held at the home of Mrs. James Willison, Mountain Lake Road, on Tuesday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock. Miss Emily Bolgiano will give a reading.

The second inspection of yards and gardens will be made the latter part of this week, according to Miss Lottie Loar, president of the club. The list of prizes this year includes blue spruces and other evergreens, perennial roots, bulbs and other plants.

DIES IN HOSPITAL AFTER BEING ATTACKED BY BULL

Newton Savage, of Friendsville, Fatally Injured by Animal

Newton Savage, 67 years old, of near Friendsville, died Monday morning at the Allegany Hospital, Cumberland, from injuries suffered last Friday when he was badly gored by a bull on his farm.

The animal's legs became tangled in a chain by which it was fastened and when Mr. Savage went to release the bull he was attacked. He called for help and two of his sons ran from the barn to their father's aid. They succeeded in getting the bull away from the prostrate man but he had been gored about the abdomen and several ribs had been broken. Immediately following the injured man was sent to the hospital where he received surgical treatment, but his injuries were of such nature that nothing could be done to prolong his life.

Mr. Savage is survived by his wife and several children who reside on a farm near Friendsville, to which his remains were taken Monday and from which the funeral occurred yesterday afternoon.

DUPLICATE CERTIFICATES NET 2 MEN $28 ON SCALPS

Said To Have Confessed Presenting Same Pelts For Bounty Payment Several Times

MAY IMPLICATE OTHERS

Having admitted that they had received $14 each in one week from the same pelts of animals upon which the county pays a bounty, Walter Fike, 24, and Edward Knox, 25, both of near McHenry, and brothers-in-law, are being held in the Garrett County Jail on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses and perjury, and are awaiting a hearing before a Justice of the Peace.

Among the eight pelts of animals which were passed off as weasels, was found one of a chipmunk, turned inside out and in such a way that it resembled a weasel and passed the inspection of a justice of the peace or notary public, before whom the affidavits were made in order to secure the certificates. A fox pelt was another pelt in the number and was said to have been killed at least five months ago, while the law states that pelts must be presented within sixty days after the animal is killed.

A question has been raised in the State's Attorney's office as to the validity of an affidavit taken before a notary public in connection with the bounty paid by the county for the destruction of certain wild animals and there is also a question as to whether or not the justice of the peace before whom the affidavit was first made is not liable for the recovery of fees because of his failure to so mark the scalp or skin so as to prevent any second certificate being issued for the same. If he had properly marked the scalps there could not have been any second certificate issued, according to Fred. A. Thayer, attorney for the County Commissioners

Fike has admitted to authorities that there are a number of others implicated in the same business and investigations which are being made by county authorities are expected to lead to more arrests within a few days.

A bounty of fifty cents is paid for each weasel pelt and $2.00 for each fox. The Justice of the Peace or the Notary Public before whom the affidavit is made is supposed, according to the provisions of the bounty law, to mark the pelt by cutting holes through the ear of the pelt.

Under Article 12, Section 527 of the local code, it is provided that the pelt must be taken before a Justice of the Peace and there affidavit be made as to the ownership, the date upon which the animal was killed. But under Article 68, Section 3, entitled "Notary Public," it states that a notary has the power of administering oaths in any matter in which a justice may administer it, and with the same effect.

The justice, however, must issue a certificate and mark the pelt, and because of this added duty it is the opinion of Attorney Thayer that a valid certificate can only be issued by a Justice of the Peace. An opinion to this effect has been filed by the attorney in the office of the County Commissioners.

The seven weasel pelts and one fox pelt would bring a bounty of $5.50, but with the chipmunk hide counted as a weasel, as was done, the certificates would be worth $6.00, and it would have been necessary to present them before a justice or notary five times to have received the $28 which the two men are being held have admitted that they obtained during one week.

Held In Jail

Cecil Wilburn was arrested Saturday by Sheriff Haenftling charged with being a party to the unlawful killing of a cow on the farm of Harrison Beachy near Bittinger. Wilburn is being held in the County Jail and will be given a hearing in a short time.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

From Fred Reis in Baltimore comes the suggestion that since I have become all married, that the "Scoop Himself" line at the head of this column be changed.

Thus far the boss editor is the only censor of this column, but I'm not saying what the result will be after October 1. Until then I am still myself, at times.

Mrs. Sprague is keeping tab on Charlie, of Kitzmiller. After reading Scoop's column last week she reminded him at lunch on Tuesday that he should not use his napkin for his nose. Charlie, believing everything that appears in this column is true, personally appeared before me on Tuesday, the 19th day of July, 1932, at 1 p. m., and asked if he might use his shirt sleeve. To the best of my knowledge and belief, I said this had been an old Spanish custom (or English in his ease) since the time of Nero, who was known to use the sleeve of his Roman Toga in such fashion, while fiddling at the time Rome was consumed. Emily Poste may not agree, but who cares what she thinks? Or what I think? If you must change the subject.

Hero Is Censored

The Times magazine of July 4, carries a story concerning "Her Hero" advertisement which has been gracing a number of billboards of the county within the past few weeks. It states in part:

Long and varied has been the career of the best known U. S. bull—"Bull Durham." He was born in Durham, N. C., at the close of the Civil War. But not until last month had Bull Durham encountered Romance. Then suddenly 35,000 billboards throughout the land proclaimed the news. They showed him pasted on the side of a barn. Before the picture, big eyes ogling, tongue hanging out in an expression of lugubrious passion, stood a buxom cow. This whimsy was captioned "Her Hero."

Motorists grinned. Advertising men thought it smart. But to the churchwomen of Willow Glen, California, it was the epitome of bad taste, an affront to California womanhood. They went before their town council and demanded that Willow Glen's school children should not see it on their way to school. The council summoned for defense Edward Lloyd Lomax of the billboard advertising corporation. After the trial was over he told interested people that hereafter Willow Glen's school children could look at a harmless poster of a youth and maiden in scanty one-piece bathing suits.

CANNERIES SHOULD LOOK LIKE MODERN KITCHENS

Canned Products from Maryland Have High Rating Everywhere

To obtain a license for the operation of a cannery or to renew such a license, canners throughout the State have been advised to take the up-to-date kitchen as a model and to arrange their plants accordingly.

Speaking of the requirements which must be met for licenses to be granted, Mr. A. L. Sullivan, Chief of the Bureau of Food and Drugs of the State Department of Health, said: "Maryland canners have worthwhile traditions to maintain. Canned products from Maryland have a high rating everywhere. To secure such ratings, the first requisite is cleanliness—cleanliness of the plant, of the product and of the individual who handles it. Cleanliness and standard products, as every canner knows, go hand in hand.

"The regulations under which the canneries are licensed fix certain minimum requirements as to construction and drainage. No cannery may be licensed unless it is so located or constructed that the waste liquids and inedible products can be readily removed from the premises or stored or destroyed without constituting a menace or objectionable, insanitary condition. There are requirements also, as to the care and cleaning of the equipment. There must also be an adequate water supply, comfort features and toilets. Suitable living quarters must be provided for the employes. Proper attention must be given to the condition of these quarters and to the disposal of waste and garbage.

"As to the plants themselves—the up-to-date kitchen with its smooth, clean walls, its abundance of air and light, its spick and span equipment, its supply of clean utensile and of clean water, furnishes an admirable model for canners to follow.

"Every cannery should be provided with good cement floors, properly sloped to insure adequate drainage. Rest rooms, wash rooms and a good water supply for employes, with the necessary drinking facilities are other essentials. Employes who prepare food products must wear some sort of clean, washable oversuits or aprons, preferably white or other washable uniforms. They must keep their finger nails clean and must wash their hands before commencing work and after each absence from work."

Inspection of the canneries was begun early in the season and will be continued throughout the summer. So far, licenses have been granted or renewed to 68, and many more are expected to apply as the season advances. Last year 271 canneries were licensed and 1,700 inspections, or reinspections, were made.

In 1931, Maryland canners packed more tomatoes and green beans than any other State, and the State held third and fourth places, respectively, in the production of canned peas and corn. The tomato pack reached a total of 1,709,558 cases of No. 3 cans. For the last twenty years, the tomato output has averaged approximately one-third of the total produced in the United States.

Time To Dig Tulips
By
B. R. Ballard, Extension Horticulturist

Darwin tulips are gross feeders and since the roots do not forage far away from the bulb, they soon exhaust the fertility of the soil and after a year or so begin to deteriorate. Furthermore, many offsets are formed and the bulbs become crowded. Some varieties are usually prolific.

If one desires to have the tulip bed present the best appearance year after year, this may be done by digging the tulips each year. It is generally desirable to wait until the foliage begins to turn yellow before digging commences. It is very important not to allow the seed pods to form, as this makes a heavy drain on the plant and the bulbs do not attain the size they would if the seed pods are not allowed to develop.

After bulbs are dug they should be spread thinly in a cool, dry place for curing. Sometime before planting in the fall of the year, the bulbs should be cleaned and sorted. After proper curing the offsets separate readily from the parent bulb. The larger bulbs should be sorted out for planting in the flowering beds. The offsets may be planted in the garden where a season's growth will develop many of them to the flowering size. This is a simple method of increasing the stock of bulbs.

Before replanting the bulbs in late September or October the soil should be well fertilized, especially the subsoil below the bulbs. The depth for planting will vary from four to six inches depending upon character of soil.

BUCKWHEAT OUT IN GARRETT

The Bentztown Bard (Folger McKinsey) contributed the following to his column appearing daily in the Baltimore Sun last Friday morning:

Buckwheat out in Garrett
And the little patches bright
In those pocekets of the hillsides
Where the buckwheat grows so right:
Buckwheat out in Garrett,
And the partridges in glee
Singing back the Bob White chorus
'Neath a mighty shagbark tree.

Over Deep Lake sifts the dawning,
Down its miles the twilight falls;
And the hills are like an awning
O'er the vale that 'neath them sprawls:
Buckwheat out in Garrett,
And the sweet bloom dripping wine
For the bees that bulge with honey
From the buckwheat honey-line.

O rolling hills of beauty
In that land against the sky
Where the dreams of mountain Maryland
To the gates of heaven fly!
Buckwheat out in Garrett,
And the guineas' "keet-a-keet"
Sounding down the pleasant evening
With the long lake at our feet.

BELIEVE IN LEGENDS. AND IT OUGHTA RAIN FORTY DAYS

Last Friday being St. Swithin's Day and it having rained before midnight on that day, you can put it down that it's going to rain sometime during every day for forty days—that is, if one believes in the veracity of age-old legends.

The story that it will rain for 40 days if a single drop falls on St. Swithin's Day has been handed down from generation to generation for centuries and is firmly embedded in the lives of English speaking people.

St. Swithin was an Englishman, so the myth affirms, who lived in the ninth eentury, A. D. In 852 he was made Bishop of Winchester, which, after Canterbury, is the most ancient see in England. During the reigns of King Egbert and King Ethelwolf, Bishop Swithin held the chancellorship but despite his high office and with extraordinary modesty he made a request that when he died he be buried with the rank and file, rather than in the ehaneel of his church, which he considered too holy for his bones to rest in.

When the bishop died his wish was followed and he was buried in Winchester churchyard. But later on the body was disinterred (971) and buried in the chancel. At this disregard of the good man's request nature got her back up and a storm came on that showed no signs of abating until forty days had passed.

Historical records make no mention of this unusual state of affairs, and there is nothing to show that the weather sages of the day either predicted the phenomenon or made a note of it.

But who wants dry historical facts flung in his face when there is a legend to tell?

Application For Requisition Papers In Alleged Incendiary Case Granted

The requisition for extradition papers on Tony Bromeio, of Connellsville, Pa., who is being held in the jail at Uniontown, Pa., has been granted by Governor Albert C. Ritchie, according to Walter W. Dawson, State's Attorney, and he may be brought here within the next few days for questioning in the recent fire which was said to have been of incendiarism origin.

Sam Picquadio, Martin Jubic and Louis Wisilosky, all of Connellsville, Pa., are being held in the Garrett county jail and are said to have confessed to their part in the crime, and it is alleged that they have implicated Bromeio.

When he would not waive extradition, Mr. Dawson filed an application for requisition papers with the Governor last week.

The house, corner of Fifth and Green street, was found to be ablaze in the early morning of June 16. Emroy Bolden, fireman discovered a can and some gasoline-soaked clothing, which led to a thorough investigation, and later to the arrest of the three now in the county jail.

Bromeio, it is alleged, is the head of the "gang," who knows the prineipal or principals who paid for having the fire set.

THRIFTY home-managers have found that electric refrigeration is an economy, not an expense. Their food dollars go farther. They buy perishables, for example, 2 for 25c instead of 15c each and know that they will be kept fresh and wholesome until used. They can take advantage of bargain specials and get a whole week's supply at far lower prices. They can keep leftovers for days and make them into appetizing dishes that even HE would never suspect of being leftovers.

These new food economies are actually EXTRA savings which can be depended on day after day. Let us show you in actual figures how you too can economize with electric refrigeration.

Taxpayers League of County Has Been Reorganized

With William Miller as chairman, the Taxpayers League of Garrett county was reorganized recently at the Court house. By-laws and the purposes of the league were drawn up at this meeting.

The purposes of the league, according to Mr. Miller, are to arouse the taxpayers of Garrett county to the importance of taking a more active part in the solution of the tax problems, with a view of placing limitations upon the expenditures of money; to limit the total tax burden within the ability of the taxpayer to pay; to demand a strict accounting of all public moneys levied, collected, and disbursed by county officials; to favor repeal of local laws applying to Garrett county which are a burden on the individual taxpayer, or which serve special interests and advocate the repeal of enactment of such local and general laws which will relieve the over-burdened taxpayers.

The by-laws call for a Board of directors of not less than three or more than five from each election district of the county, the board as elected on April 16, at Oakland, to hold office for one year.

Lesson for July 24

THE DELIVERANCE AT THE RED SEA

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 14:1-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is my strength and song, and he is become my salvation.—Exodus 15:2.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Walking Through the Sea.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Dry Path Through the Sea.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Israel Won Freedom.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How God Helps His People.

I. Israel in Straitened Circumstances (vv 1-12).

1. Going ont of the land of Egypt (13:18). The tenth stroke from the strong hand of the Almighty made Pharaoh willing to let Israel go. The tenth turn of the screw of Omnipotence brought him to time. The Israelites went out from Egypt on their way to the promised land with a high hand. The way of the wilderness was a longer route, but it had many valuable lessons for them. By this way they escaped the experiences of war which would have come to them at the hand of the Philistines, but they learned the crookedness and perverseness of their own hearts (Deut. 8:12).

2. Hemmed in (vv. 1-3). At the Lord's direction they turned from their first course and were made to face a great difficulty. The Red sea was before them and mountains on either side. However, they should have been encouraged because the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud to lead the way, and by night in a pillar of fire to give them light. He took not away the pillar of cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night (13:21, 22).

3. Pursued by Pharaoh (vv. 4-12). The stricken Egyptians had now recovered from their sorrow, and perceiving the straitened circumstances of the Israelites they interpreted this to mean that Moses was unable to lead them out of their difficulty. Therefore they went in pursuit, hoping yet to prevent their leaving the country.

II. The Miraculous Escape of the Israelites (vv. 13-22).

There seems to have been a twofold object in leading them in to this particular place.

1. To strengthen the faith of the people. To be delivered from such circumstances would impress upon them anew the reality of the love and power of God. The people, as usual, displayed their unbelief, and even censured Moses for leading them out of Egypt. Moses replied to their murmurs by saying, "Fear ye not, stand still and see the salvation of the Lord." Standing still in such a trial is faith taking hold on God's promises. God said, "Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Having had his definite promise, to have prayed longer would have been unbelief. They were to go forward a step at a time without raising any question as to the outcome, for from the source from which came the command, came the power to obey. The presence of the Lord was adapted to their needs as they went forward. When the situation was such that the Lord's leadership was not necessary, the cloud passed to the rear and held the enemy at bay. The presence of God had a double effect—darkness and confusion to the enemy, and light and guidance to his people.

2. To lay a snare for the overthrow of the Egyptians. Those who will not heed the warning judgments of God may be allowed to go to their destruction under the presumption that the Almighty is helping them.

III. The Overthrow of the Egyptians (vv. 23-27).

Having seen the Israelites go across the sea dryshod, Pharaoh and his people madly pursued them. They insanely thought that they in their unbelief could follow in the wake of God's children. The Lord looked forth from the cloud and wrought confusion among the Egyptians. He not only looked upon them but took off their chariot wheels which caused them to realize that God was fighting against them. He then directed Moses to stretch forth his rod and bring destruction upon the Egyptians.

IV. The Song of Triumph (15:1-21).

Standing on the other shore of the Red sea they could fittingly sing the song of triumph because of their miraculous deliverance and the overwhelming defeat of the Egyptians. They attributed it all to God. In a glad coming day, a similar but much larger company will sing the same song with an important addition, namely, the "Song of the Lamb" (Rev. 15:3).

GEMS OF THOUGHT

The question of duty is one of the most serious. On that pivot swings both usefulness and destiny.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

In 1867 the soldiers of the Union as well as those of the Confederate Army had returned to the vocations of peace. Once more the hearts of the American people turned toward the establishment of that new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Books were still sent to Virginia, but a temporary falling off of interest was reported after the effects of the years of war. In 1865-66 the American Bible Society sent South, through the Maryland Bible Society, over 19,000 volumes. However, in 1867, only 543 volumes were sent direct to soldiers, indicating the rapidity with which the troops were being mustered out of service.

Just one year before this the American Bible Society made a third attempt to sow the entire country with the good seed of the Word. Urgency was expressed by those most interested in the State Society for general and enthusiastic cooperation in this ever-growing task. As the course of empire made its way westward, the areas to be covered increased far more rapidly than either workers or money for carrying on the work could be found.

"It may be that the new auxiliaries which were reported at the time in Newtown (now Pocomoke City) in Worcester county, Westminster and Taneytown in Carroll county, and in Cumberland, Allegany county, received some of their inspiration from this nation-wide missionary call.

The good accomplished by these auxiliaries cannot be measured by the amount of money raised or by the number of Bibles and portions distributed. Only the Lamb's Book of Life can reveal the true story of the labors and sacrifices carried on in these centers.

A report of this period calls attention to a new problem resulting from the emancipation of the slaves. The record reads as follows: "The recent change in the condition of our colored people has increased their demand for the Holy Scriptures, both for domestic and Sabbath school use. They have, accordingly, been largely aided."

In 1868, Mr. Francis T. King became president of the Society, and continued to serve in this position until 1885. He was an orthodox Friend, a wealthy merchant and executive of the will of Johns Hopkins and one of the first trustees of the institution founded by him. Mr. King's fine executive ability and generous leadership brought such success to the Society's program that the annual report for 1868 records nearly 23,000 volumes distributed in his first year of service as president and a gift of $3,000 to the American Bible Society. A large part of the distribution had been among the colored people. An appeal was made at this time for more money so that the State might be more quickly covered by the Society's agency.

Students were now being employed during the vacations months as colporteurs. Five young theologues from the Protestant Episcopal Seminary at Alexandria, Virginia, had fairly well covered the State in the summer of 1867. From that time until the last decade colportage of this type has been carried on by the Society.

In 1869-70 the North German Lloyd line steamships began to bring hundreds of immigrants to Baltimore. This tide of immigration presented a field of activity to the Maryland Society which it gladly and quickly entered. Over 1800 vessels were visited in the next two years and 931 volumes distributed to immigrants within a few months.

Thomas Huxley has well said that the Bible is the Magna Charter of the poor and the oppressed. In that belief then belated pilgrims to the land of promise gladly received the Word of Life and Liberty.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

Troubles of the delegates at Lausanne, seeking to settle the reparations question, and those at Geneva trying to come to some agreement on disarmament, tend to prove once more the statement which has so often been made by neutral observers of the European situation, to the effect that the difficulties of the old continent are not so much financial as political. We hear all sorts of pleas from financiers in Europe and in our own country to the effect that European countries ought to get together and bury their difficulties for the sake of the general economic situation. The world, we are told, is fast going to ruin and our modern civilization is doomed, unless the European nations find some means of getting together and starting a sane and constructive program designed to turn the world toward normalcy again.

And yet, often as this advice has been given, when the delegates assamble in conference, representing the nations of Europe, great and small, they are unable to arrive at any definite conclusion, in spite of an economic situation which in most parts of Europe seems to be steadily growing worse. In short, the delegates of the various countries will not yield to the dangerous economic situation. This can only mean one thing, and that is that principal European differences are not economic, but political. Each prefers to run the chance of national ruin rather than yield anything tangible to the other fellow.

The conferences at Geneva and Lausanne are abundant proof of this. At Lausanne pleas have been put forward that Germany and France patch their troubles in the interest of the common good. Yet every attempt at an agreement has failed and there is no assurance that anything tangible or lasting may be accomplished. It is indeed true that the delegates may go through the motions of agreeing, to save their faces, but no student of political affairs, that we know anything about, believes anything lasting will be accomplished.

France is determined to save something in the way of reparations and Germany says that she can not pay any more reparations. France is determined to save the reparations scheme not because she needs the money, but because she feels that to let it go by the boards would mean the ultimate revision of the Treaty of Versailles and the end of the French dominance of Europe. The Germans, while they probably could not pay anything for the present, are determined to get out of reparations for all time to come, not because they feel that they may never be able to pay anything again, but for the reason that they want to end the whole scheme and then get rid of some of the burdens imposed on them by the treaty of peace, so interfering with French control of the Continent, and increasing German prestige.

So the talk about the way Europe is going on the rocks in an economical way falls on deaf ears. The various nations are determined not to give in any further, and they are dominated principally by political questions. Perhaps they recall the fact that Europe has been ruined before and has survived, although they ought not forget the story about the old pitcher that went to the well once too many times. At any rate the economic situation is secondary with the statesmen who are running the nations of Europe, and it is probably equally true that economic conditions are secondary with the various peoples, too. Otherwise, the statesmen would not be able to survive.

There is a lesson in this for Uncle Sam. We have heard our own government advised time and again to cancel the European debts and lower the tariffs to relieve the economic situation in Europe and so save the world. But if, as has been demonstrated above, the trouble with Europe is political rather than economic, the program of cancellation would only be a temporary remedy, and nothing could be done to really help Europe until the nations over there straighten out their political difficulties. Cancellation and tariff revision, under such circumstances, would only injure the United States without helping Europe. That is why the American administration has repeatedly advised the statesmen of Europe to iron out their own troubles and agree among themselves before they ask any further sacrifices on the part of Uncle Sam.

News and Comment

By CHARLES F. SCOTT

Washington, D. C.—Since that day in 1896 when William Jennings Bryan, a veritable young Lochinvar came out of the west, projected himself upon a distracted Democratic convention and with his dramatic "You shall not crucify mankind upon this cross of gold; you shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns," nominated himself for the presidency, the Democratic party has not experienced such an upset, such a complete transferrence of ideas and leadership as happened to it when Franklin D. Roosevelt was nominated as its candidate for president at Chicago one day in the very recent past.

Bryan made the Democratic party radical and kept it that way for sixteen years—keeping it out of power just that long.

Roosevelt again has made the Democratic party radical. Will he keep it out of power as long as Bryan did?

Bryan was a western man and Mr. Roosevelt is a man of the east. And yet the forces which nominated Roosevelt were as distinctly sectional, the south and west against the east, as were the forces that nominated Bryan. In the east, Roosevelt was backed by but one small state—New Hampshire—which can not conceivably be carried by any Democrat at the election.

Maine, Vermont and part of Pennsylvania were his in the convention, it is true, but they will not be his in the election. He owes his nomination exclusively to the south and the west. He is as much a candidate of those sections as Bryan was. And he will have the antagonism of the conservative eastern states just as distinctly as Bryan had it.

And what a crowd of faces that have been familiar these past twenty years will fade out of the picture with the coming of Roosevelt! Smith, Shouse, Raskob, Melvin Traylor, Newton D. Baker, James M. Cox, Robert Bulkley, Governor Ritchie, Governor Byrd, Senator Glass, Bernard Baruch, John W. Davis, Owen D. Young, James A. Reed, David I. Walsh, Joseph T. Robinson—all these and others like them who have been formulating Democratic policies and managing Democratic policies for the past two decades, all these go into the discahr, and onto the screen to take their places will be seen such figures as Wheeler of Montana, who bolted the Democratic party in 1924 to run as a candidate for vice presndent with Robert M. LaFollette; Dill of Washington; Huey Long of Louisiana; Norris of Nebraska; LaFollette, Blaine, Nye and a half dozen other radicals in the northwest. It is certainly a picture vastly different from what Democrats expected a year ago to look upon at this time. A year ago statements and interviews were emanating from Democratic headquarters in a constant stream, speeches were being made by conspicuous party leaders, all announcing the purpose of the democracy so to conduct the party as to inspire confidence in the business and financial interests and in the minds of thoughtful people generally. Today the whole scene is changed. The radicals have taken control, the crusade against "Big Business" has started, the campaign is to be made around "the forgotten man"—and we shall see what we shall see.

Franklin D. Roosevelt is not a son or a nephew or even a cousin of Theodore Roosevelt, although he has been rated as one or the other of these innumerable times. The truth is that this Roosevelt and the former President were about fifth cousins, going back to somewhere along 1644 to find a common ancestor. Inheriting a fair fortune, Franklin D. Roosevelt was afforded all the advantages of culture and education which the son of a well-to-do New York family should receive. He is without doubt a cultivated, clean, honorable gentleman. The fight that will be made against him will be upon the ground that he lacks the qualities absolutely vital to the presidency in such a time as this. Frank Kent, the distinguished political analyst, himself a Democrat, wrote to his paper, the Baltimore Sun, from the convention at Chicago that the opposition to him there was due solely to the "deep seated conviction among the better grade party leaders that he does not measure up to the presidency, that his nomination would be a party disaster and his election a national calamity." His opponents in that convention assailed Gov. Roosevelt on the ground of his complete lack of moral leadership, pointing out that for nearly two years an investigation in New York City has revealed the government there as reeking with graft and corruption; that through a long sequence of sordid disclosures not one note of moral indignation has come from the governor of the state, not one word to indicate shock or concern, no single act not forced upon him, no raising of his arm for decency or against indecency. They pointed also to the curious behavior of the governor as a candidate before the convention in first asking his lieutenants to start a fight against the two-thirds rule and then abandoning it, asking them to have the nomination made before the resolutions were adopted and then withdrawing that demand, tacitly approving at one time the selection of Jouett Shouse as permanent chairman and later switching his support to Senator Walch—all these as evidence of the vacillating temperament which they declare is characteristic of the man.

But of all these things there will be plenty of time to learn in the next four months. There will be plenty of time also to talk and write about the gentleman from Texas who is to be his running mate on the ticket. Roosevelt and Garner! How irresistibly they remind us of Bryan and Bryanism and all they stood for—and all they did to the Democratic party!

GOOD HARVESTS SEEN ON COUNTY FARMS THIS YEAR

Corn and Potato Crops Look Unusually Good at This Time, County Agent Carter States

EXPECT AVERAGE YIELDS

The dark green color of healthy corn, intermingled here and there with the lighter shades of the ripening grass and forage crops, is holding predominant sway over the fields of Garrett county this week, giving indications of a more than average harvest this fall. Buckwheat, sown late in June, is showing a good stand and while it is now too early to predict the ultimate outcome, indications are that buckwheat cakes will not be strangers on the tables of Garrett countians the coming winter.

County Agent John H. Carter, who has been making daily trips into the various farming sections, said that the corn and potato crops look unusually good and hay and other forgae crops fair. Owing to the early dry spell, the meadows are not as productive as last year, and the season for peas has been below the average. The appearance of the corn is healthy, he said, and is apparent in practically all sections of the county.

Practically all the farmers are optimistic about the fall harvest, and unless some catastrophe comes they are certain to make good returns from their labor. What they will be able to get for their products in the markets will determine the conditions for next year.

Maryland farmers as a whole have reduced their acreages in corn, wheat, tobacco and sweet potatoes, but these are partially offset by increased acreages of hay, barley, and white potatoes. The wheat crop suffered losses from insects and diseases during June. The corn throughout the state has not grown well this spring and prospects are for a yield per acres about two bushels below the average. About average yields of potatoes are expected and better than average yields of sweet potatoes. Average prospects for yields of hay crops are reported.

Present conditions promise a good crop of grapes, but other fruit crops are spotted and production of apples, peaches and pears will be considerably lower than last year.

MT. LAKE PARK

The Baltimore contingent of the Epworth League has charge of the Park this week. They are an upstanding fine set of young men and women.

The registration shows approximately 275—not so bad for a depression year.

An encouraging sign is the presence of some members of the League from the Pittsburgh area. It is rumored that there is some dissatisfaction over the site chosen for their meeting this year, many are in favor of returning to the Park next year. Here's hoping.

Of the Baltimore crowd, more than a hundred are here for the first time. That is also a good sign, but, nevertheless we miss some of the old fellows who have been coming here for several years. We hope that by next year Old Man Depression will be down for the count.

And then there was a fine crowd of people, and a crowd of fine people on the Park last Sunday. It is estimated there were upwards of 2,000 people gathered in the Auditorium—why not call it the Bowl?—to hear a good program.

The presence of some of Oakland's outstanding citizens, serving as a welcoming committee, was a pleasing touch and made the spirit of cooperation more evident. We are moving in the right direction. Better times for the Park are in the offing.

Nearly every cottage in the Park is now occupied. The few remaining will be shortly rented.

It was all a mistake about the B. & O. Tower closing—at least for the present. Although the hand-thrown switches are all in place, ready to be connected, the order of closing seems to have been reconsidered. That's a bit of good news.

Tuesday and Wednesday nights were special nights with the Institute. July 19 the entertainment consisted of vocal and instrumental talent and a presentation by the Institute Faculty of "Seth Parker." On Wednesday night "The Father of His Country," a Colonial Pageant, with a cast of 100 in appropriate costumes, was presented.

Next Sunday should be a banner day at the Park for this season. It is West Virginia Day, and a large number of the citizens from our neighboring state will be present. In the afternoon, beginning about 1:45, the Queen Sylvia Band of Elkins will give an open air concert, followed by an interesting program in the auditorium (again we suggest calling it The Bowl). Dr. Nat T. Frame will make the principal address. Dr. Frame is always interesting. He is especially well versed on all phases of extension work and presents his subject in such a clear and convincing manner, that even the layman can readily grasp the present, as well as potential, importance of the program being projected. Every resident of the mountain top is, or should be, interested in West Virginia Day.

Dr. and Mrs. Carr had as their guests for the past few days Mrs. Lott, Mrs. Fioescher, and Mr. and Mrs. Vabriskie, all of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mrs. W. T. Burch, Jr., of New York, is the guest of Mrs. Sally H. Burch. Mrs. Burch was accompanied here by Master Billy Burch, who has been visiting in New York for the past six weeks.

Mrs. Elizabeth Talson, of Wheeling, is in her cottage for the season.

Miss Dorothy Brackett, of Fairmont, is spending some time with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Brackett.

Mr. and Mrs. Ollie Brandon, Baltimore, are guests in the Park.

Mrs. Richard Cale, of Terra Alta, has returned to her home after spending several days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Comerford.

Mrs. O. E. Annon, of Fairmont, and Mrs. Wilmoth, of Elkins, are guests at Allenhurst.

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Bartholomew and Dr. L. M. Bender have as their guests Rev. and Mrs. Edgar W. Beckett, Mr. William Eiburn, Mr. Wilfred Townsend, Misses Laura and Mary Frederick, Bertha Baker, and Norma Hoage, all of Baltimore. Mr. Bartholomew is on the teaching staff of the Peabody Conservatory of Music and engaged in special research work in that institution.

Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Gillian, Washington, will occupy the Arthur Fike home during the month of August. Mr. and Mrs. Gillian have been welcome summer visitors of the Park for several seasons.

Only two candidates have filed applications for councilmen to be voted for at the coming August primary election. These are Gay Hayden and James Elliott. The latter will succeed himself. Although an ordinance passed by council provides for the holding of the primary election, yet, inasmuch as only two candidates have filed and there are only two vacancies to be filled, it would seem an unnecessary expense, in this instance. Nothing would be gained, as there is no provision in the ordinance allowing candidates to go on the ticket by petition, or otherwise. Therefore, only the two candidates who have filed applications can be voted for, and their election is assured.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Beals, and Harry Roden and family, of Coal Run, Pa., were Sunday guests of Mrs. G. W. Sterling, at her home in Loch Lynn Heights.

Mrs. O'Donnell, who was quite ill for some time, is able to be out again.

Messrs. Oliver Hardesty, Raymond Fazenbaker, and Misses Mabel Fazenbaker and Opal Hardesty were visiting relatives in Morgantown, Sunday.

St. Paul's M. E. Church

The theme for Sunday morning at St. Paul's M. E. church, Rev. J. W. Dawson, pastor, will be "How to Approach the Throne."

Union League meeting at 6:45 in St. Paul's church. There will be no evening worship other than that mentioned above.

TWO FARM HOUSES BURN; MAN IS SAVED BY LADDER

Dwellings of Mrs. Alice Thayer and Hobart Harvey Destroyed

The dwelling of Mrs. Alice Thayer and family, about three miles south of Oakland, on the old Oakland-Thomas road, was completely destroyed by fire on Monday morning about 10:15 o'clock when sparks from a defective flue leading through the upper floor from the kitchen spread flames through the second story of the dwelling and gained such headway before assistance arrived that it was impossible to save the property.

The Oakland fire department was called, but due to the lack of water at the farm when the truck arrived, it was impossible to check the flames.

John Thayer, of Pittsburgh, a son of Mrs. Thayer, who had been at her home recuperating from an operation for appendicitis, was cut off from the stairway when he attempted to get some things out of the second story and it was necessary to raise a ladder to one of the windows to get him out of the building.

In addition to the destruction of the house much of the furniture on the upper floor was also burned.

Mrs. Thayer expressed her appreciation for the assistance given by the fire department and all of her neighbors.

The home of Hobart Harvey, on the road leading from the State road to the Youghiogheny Hydro-Electric power house, about seven miles north of Oakland, was entirely destroyed by fire on last Wednesday afternoon, July 20, the cause of the blaze being attributed to a lightning stroke.

SCOUTS TO BEGIN ANNUAL ENCAMPMENT ON JULY 31

Local Merchants to Use Trucks to Carry Supplies—Intensive Activity Schedule Planned

OVER 35 EXPECTED TO GO

Approximately 35 members of Oakland Troop No. 1, Boy Scouts of America, their officers, and William Turney, camp cook, will leave Sunday afternoon for the permanent camping quarters on Deep Creek Lake, for their annual two weeks' outing.

An intensive schedule of class work and recreation will be carried out throughout the period, giving every boy a chance to develop his leadership qualities, his athletic and swimming ability, and to show his knowledge in scoutcraft.

At a meeting of the Troop Committee on Monday evening, the camp food list was carefully gone over and other matters pertaining to camp discussed. The money for camp is raised by donations from organizations, a benefit picture, and from the boys themselves, who are required to pay $6 for the two weeks. It will require approximately $275 to cover all expenses, it was estimated.

Frank B. Gale, scout executive, Cumberland, will visit the camp this year, and others who are expected to attend and take part in the instruction and camp fire periods are Messrs. Walter W. Dawson, Harland L. Jones, Donald R. Sincell, and F. E. Rathbun, members of the troop committee; C. E. MacMurray, of the Power House, Sins; Rev. D. C. Trimble, Rev. C. A. Shilke, Rev. W. B. Brock, and Rev. J. W. Dawson; Joseph E. Harned, G. J. Altstetter, Charles W. Ream, Paul B. Naylor, Dr. H. W. McComas, E. R. Jones, Henry Lauer and others.

Mr. MacMurray will give instructions in first aid and lifesaving; Mr. Jones, citizenship; and Mr. Harned will have a class in flowers and nature for one or two study periods.

Wednesdays and Sundays will be visiting days when parents and friends are invited to come to the camp.

Those expecting to attend the camp include Donald Stemple, Richard Gonder, Irving Broadwater, Joseph Rush, Robert Browning, George Kerins, Kenneth Lawton, Horace O'Donnell, Laurel Whipkey, John Morgan, Schell Hoye, George Stuck, Eugene Nordeck, Leroy Stewart, Hopwood Wooddell, Ralph Kahl, Wilbur Altstetter, Lewis Jones, John McIntire, Walter Dawson, Harry Stemple, Howard Naylor, John Baird, Robert Lawton, Charles Mason, Bernard Gonder, Jr., Harley Dawson, Robert Altstetter, Carroll Casteel, Joseph Sollars, Eugene Showe, Robert Stemple, McClelland Dixon, and possibly others.

The boys will leave Sunday afternoon at 1 o'clock and the supplies will be taken in trucks provided by local merchants.

There will be a meeting of the Court of Honor on Friday evening following the regular weekly scout meeting, at 8 o'clock, in the scout hall. Hopwood Wooddell became a second class scout at last week's meeting and recent Tenderfoot scouts are Charles Mason, John Edward Baird, Robert Lawton and Wilbur Altstetter.

WATER NEEDED TO SAVE HOMES OUTSIDE OAKLAND

Oakland Fire Department Urgently Request Farmers To Build Dams Near Dwellings

MUST HAVE COOPERATION

The Oakland Volunteer Fire department, at a meeting this week, again urged farmers and others beyond reach of the water system of Oakland, to in some way provide a storage of water, for use of the department when it is called to extinguish fires. Through the columns of The Republican, this suggestion was made some time ago, but according to Lawrence Fraley, a member of the department, nothing seemingly has been done.

The request for cooperation with the department cites the recent fires which have resulted disastrously.

"A fire occurring this week, on a farm adjacent to Oakland, to which the department was called and was powerless on account of lack of water, furnishes a striking example of the extreme importance of carrying out the suggestions issued by the Department. In this case the dwelling and contents were completely destroyed, and a large part of both could have been saved, had the water been available.

"Further, there was an excellent opportunity for a water storage supply on this property, there being a deep ravine just below the house, through which a stream of water flowed and across which a dam could have been constructed with a relatively small expenditure of labor and effort.

"The Department is always ready and willing, even anxious, to answer all calls for assistance within its reach. However, it is unfair to call on the department when no attempt has been made to cooperate or comply with its suggestions.

"Runs made to outlying districts are the most dangerous and expensive, due to distance, narrow country roads and wear and tear on equipment. The run in February when the unfortunate accident occurred which caused serious injury to firemen, damage to equipment and a monetary loss of $1,000 to the department, was another example of the unfairness of calls of this kind. When the scene of the fire was finally reached, an outlying farm dwelling, no water was available and the trip with all its unfortunate consequences, was absolutely fruitless and unnecessary.

"The department has thousands of dollars invested in its equipment, the reputation of being the foremost volunteer fire department in Western-Maryland and operates with the utmost efficiency if it has the water. Otherwise, its equipment and efforts of firemen are useless.

"Given half a chance, it will save your property if you do your part and give it the one necessary thing that it cannot supply itself.

"When it is called its firemen, volunteers serving without compensation, instantly drop their work and own personal interests, and at the risk of life, make record runs to come to your aid.

"Is it asking too much of the individual to state that the department absolutely expects him to do his part and when the department makes the sacrifice to come to his aid, to have the water ready for use?"

Investigating Wounding of Two Youths in Legs With Charge of Shot

Investigation is being made by W. W. Dawson, State's Attorney, and Deputy Sheriff Clarence W. Spear as to cause for the wounding in the legs of Howard Speicher, 17, of Loch Lynn Heights, and Ernest Wolfe, of Keyser, W.Va., who had been staying with Speicher, the wounds in both youths having been inflicted by a charge of shot fired by some person unknown.

Speicher and Wolfe were wounded last Thursday night, but said nothing about the occurrence until yesterday, when the Speicher boy's left leg began to pain him severely and he made the fact known to Mayor Hardesty, of Loch Lynn, who brought him to Oakland and had the pellets extracted by Health Officer Clarke.

It is said that the boys had walked home with a woman and her daughter on the night in question and it was not until after they had seen them safely to their door and were returning that the shots were fired.

The investigation will be continued

BALTIMORE COAL AWARDS TO AID GARRETT COUNTY

Mine Operators In This Section To Receive Most of Citys Contract For This Year

Garrett county coal mine operators will receive approximately $45,000 from contracts for 38,500 tons of coal awarded yesterday by the Board of Awards of Baltimore, Mayor Howard W. Jackson points out in a letter to The Republican this morning.

Six contracts for coal were awarded, representing an expenditure of $151,716, of which 83.4 per cent was for Garrett county coal. The quantity involved was 45,300 tons.

The Davis Coal and Coke Company was given a contract for 3,000 tons at $1.23 a ton f. o. b. mines. Similarly a 7,600 ton contract was awarded to the Davis Coal and Coke Company on a bid of $1.23 a ton.

Given 27,500-Ton Contract

A 27,500-ton contract for run-of-mine "Kempton 42" (Maryland) coal was awarded the Enterprise Fuel Company on a bid of $4.06 a ton delivered in buildings. The same company won a 400-ton lump coal contract with a bid of $4.46 a ton delivered in buildings, offering "Hamill" coal.

The Mayor's letter to The Republican states:

"I was much interested in a survey made by the Maryland Coal Association of conditions for the second quarter of 1932 in the mining area. It has been estimated that a state consumpion of Maryland bituminous coal of approximately 1,151,000 tons is possible during the third quarter under a unanimous plan of buying as suggested, even under present conditions. On a five-day work basis it would mean employment for 3,073 men in Maryland mines, whereas the total number employed in the second quarter was 3,451, and many of these on only a one or two-day per week basis. It is estimated that a total of $4,699,123 would be placed in circulation within the State for the third quarter of the year.

West Virginia Extension Day

Approxmately 5000 people gathered at Mountain Lake Park for West Virginia Extension Day last Sunday.

Extension service, its meaning, development and a forecast of its future furnished the theme of the address of Dr. Nat T. Frame, director of West Virginia Extension work. The "area" idea, which is the basis for the development of the Tableland program, of the three States, is the newest development in this part of the country, according to Dr. Frame.

Queen Sylvia's Band was presented by the commission of the Mountain State Forest Festival from Elkins, W. Va., and a concert preceded and followed the main program. The Apollo Chorus, Morgantown, W. Va., under the direction of David J. Roberts, sang several numbers. To this was added a varied program of chorus and solo work, including the mass singing of the Hallelujah Chorus. The Nightingales of Oakland and the St. Cecelia choirs of Oakland and Kingwood also took part. Mrs. Henry Weaver and Miss Virginia Davies were the accompanists for the Apollo Chorus, while Miss Huff, leader for the extension music, directed the festival chorus of two hundred voices.

Correll, of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, to this territory, plans are developing for a conference to be held at Mountain Lake Park on August 26 and 27. While in Garrett county and since their return to Pittsburgh they have been in communication with county leaders working out ideas for further steps. A number will go to Pittsburgh for a meeting on August 4 and 5 to decide on speakers and a program.

Trains Delayed Due to Wreck of Gasoline Cars

All Baltimore and Ohio passenger trains traveling eastward were several hours late in Oakland all day Tuesday and part of Wednesday, as a result of a wreck at Wilsonburg, W. Va., west of Clarksburg, early Tuesday morning.

All through trains were routed by New Martinsville and Benwood Junction, as the wreck completely blocked the main line.

Damage estimated at $100,000 was done when the eighth car back in a No. 94 freight buckled, a dozen cars piled up and eight burned after two gasoline tankers and a tanker of asphalt caught fire. Service over the line was delayed 19 hours.

Men Who Love

By BERTHA LEAH CROSS

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(WNU Service)

THE woman stood at the edge of the wood, in the dying light of day, her head lifted watching the blue bulk of the mountain, and the gilded orange that arose from behind it. Her figure was slim, and she might have been a high priestess at her devotions so still was she. With a sigh, her gaze dropped to the gloomy cavern of the woods, and she peered, expectant, down the path which stretched way into the blackness where the pine trunks snuggled closely together for companionship.

"Tim's late!" she said aloud. "He's been late a lot lately." A shadow seemed to fall on her heart; a sudden weight as she thought that perhaps he was already growing tired of these nightly trysts.

"He hates mother; he won't come to the house, and his mother hates me. It's all so impossible and absurd. Tim and I are both the victims of our parents."

Her thoughts roved over the seeming impasse. But her common sense revealed the solution if only Tim would see it.

"His father and mother have each other. He's not really needed at home . . . not the way I am." She sighed. "I guess it's just because I've given him too much!" bitterly. "Men are that way when women are fools like me!"

"Oh, why can't he see things right?" she said aloud. "And why does he never consider me and my wishes?"

Her thoughts swept back to their last discussion of the problem. Their words were recorded on her memory.

"I can't marry you and your mother, too! Your first duty should be to yourself and to me. You owe everything to me . . . to the man you say you love. We should come first . . . our happiness together."

"But you don't understand, Tim! Mother's sick and all alone but for me. She's helpless with that arthritis. I have to help her. She can't even dress herself alone. It would be inhuman to leave her. Oh, if only you would . . ."

"Let's not talk about it any more!" In his careless way he shunted the subject and pulled her into demanding arms.

"I'll never come there to live with her, Carrie," as she still hung back. "So we'll have to make the best of things till you get ready to come to me . . . Love me?" changing the subject abruptly. "Going to be nice to me?"

She capitulated. The evening ended as the many others had.

After another interval of waiting and of thinking, she saw a spark of light coming down the dark path, a tiny glow. Footsteps approaching. The cigarette was tossed carelessly aside.

"Tim!" she cried, throwing herself into his arms. "I thought you were never coming. I'm afraid in these dark woods!"

He laughed carelessly, drawing her up to him with a caressing arm.

"Sorry, Carrie. You see, we were playing pool down at Toni's and I lost track of time." His careless words struck her like a blow in the face. "Lost track of time," she mentally repeated. "How little he cares about seeing me!"

Her silence seemed to vex him. He pulled her down beside him on the pine needles, and looked at her reproachfully.

"Here I come a mile to see you and all you do is sulk!" Then he expressed penitence again, and the tension was eased. She yielded herself to his love making with sweet ardor.

"I love you, Tim!" she whispered, her hand against his smooth cheek. "Oh, I love you so! If anything were to part us, I should die. I want to be married, Tim, and have things right. I want to be your wife, and maybe have children . . ."

His kisses were hard and demanding on her lips. He drew her closer to him, and caressed her more passionately.

"Well, then if you love me, prove it! You know I'm ready when you say the word. I'm not stuck on this bachelor love making myself. I'm ready . . . when you are."

"But mother . . ."

"There you are!" savagely. "Back at the same old stand. She's always in your thoughts. I'm sick and tired of hearing 'mother, mother! all the time."

He pulled her to her feet.

"I'll never marry a woman who doesn't put me first!" he said. "And that's my last word. I'll never go there to live if you ask me a hundred years. What're you going to do about it?"

She stood facing him suddenly angry.

"You're cruel!" she sobbed. "You're hard and ruthless and unfeeling. You know I can't leave that poor woman alone and helpless. You're selfish and your love is nothing but passion!"

"All right!" quietly. "You've had your say. Now I'm going. And you need never come her again to meet me. I'm done!"

Flinging aside her suddenly desperate hands; ignoring her broken "I didn't mean it!" he strode off into the woods which opened and received him.

"Oh! Oh, Tim!"

Like a haunted wild creature of the woods, the woman fled across the field. Her eyes, wide and desperate, were fixed on the beckoning finger of light that streamed out from the corner room downstairs . . . her mother's room.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

Sunday afternoon was just another swimming time with me, at least it gave me an opportunity to get in on the beach parade where I could show off in my scanties and stare at the scantiers without being called brazen, bold, brassy, forward, pert, assuming or saucy; that is if I didn't stare, gaze, or look intently, too long at one sitting.

A few go swimming to swim, some go swimming or beach sitting to watch others, but the majority go swimming to give others something to watch. All humans come under class three.

Making my debut from the locker with no means of identification except my birthmark, a mole on my back, and a key tied around my neck, I nonchalantly, indifferently, unconcernedly, carelessly, and apathetically strolled, rambled, walked, promenaded and excursioned down to the dock, apparently oblivious to the many stares and motions of the beach sitters and dock sun parkers.

I finally discovered that in place of causing the sensation, they were all trying to get me to look at them, and I did, casually, incidentally, accidentally, and fortuitously.

After making an inspection of those in class three, I was reminded of the many romances that had been started when a young man first saw his young lady in a bathing suit; but more that had likewise been shattered the same way, and vice-versa.

Every woman desires to look well in a bathing suit, and every man has a sneaking suspicion that he looks swell in one. And many of them do look swell—around the stomach. Myself for instance or Archibaldson. But there's nothing inflated about my feet. They're flat, according to the doctor and the prints in the sand.

And what an array of feet was all over the landscape! Small feet on big men, little big toes and big little toes, and athlete's feet on stenographers.

From the feet up there were the knots, moles, wens and birthmarks, all evident. Before long the list will undoubtedly include appendicitis incisions. They are already being prominently worn at the larger resorts.

Moles were divided into four types, black, brown, fuzzy and those with one hair long enough to be called three whiskers. Knots were divided into mosquito bites, gnat gnaws, chigger nips which had been scratched and gouged, dug, furrowed, scored, with no consideration for will power and good intentions; and the bumps of human imperfection.

Not to mention the friendly knees and those that were enemies.

The friendly knees could be distinguished easily because they always stuck close together. The enemy knees are the horse shoe type similar to the Natural Bridge of Virginia.

There they were with piano legs, varicose veins, rolls of fat, washboard ribs, muscled arms, toothpick limbs, droopy shoulders, big ears and small head, summer haircut, Roman shnozzles, bull necks and double chins, with and without Adam's apples.

And then there were the few and far between examples of physical perfection, excellence, wholeness, and exquisiteness. Until I saw them I thought it was just a day for us shorts and squashes. One fellow along the beach was sure strutting. Anybody can strut in a bathing suit, but few there are who can strut sitting down.

Oh, well, not nearly so many of them strut when they emerge from the bathhouse with their clothes restored. And what difference does an inflated stomach or flat feet matter after all, if your heart is in the right place?

There I go, getting sentimental.

Someday I'm going to have a towel made especially for my personal use—large and fluffy, but with a small thin strip with which I can dry inside my ears.

Fred Shine married Ann Napple, according to this week's list of marriages.

After seeing one of those monster flies, whom I thought I had just massacred a few minutes before, slowly revlving on the window sill, I am wondering how many times I kill the same insect as I sit here on my seat of vantage day after day. I just can't bring myself to swish too hard at them. I am tender hearted that way, and besides, Di-di Jim just cleaned the windows.

If you were in bathing Sunday and think you were one of those whom I caught strutting with out any valid reason you can write me a nice letter by turning to a book of synonyms, where you can see that I am crazy, tottering, rickety, worn out, out of order, insane, distracted, mad, lunatic, demented, deranged, delirious, crackbrained, cracked, or out of one's senses.

If you don't want to use that you can turn to page 51 or thereabouts and find that I am a blister, vesicle, pustule, blain, bleb, blob, sinapism, on local society.

However, barring all the former, if you turn to page 201 or vicinity you will find that I am harmless, innoxious, innocuous, not hurtful, innocent, inoffensive, and now about to end, conclude, terminate, cease, wind up and cut short this epistle.

How are all your little synonyms?

Drying the Garden Surplus

The wise farm housewife plans her garden to provide a surplus of fruit and vegetables. Some kinds can very profitably be dried.

Fruits are easier to dry than most vegetables. Apples, pears, peaches, apricots, cherries, prunes, plums, figs, and berries are the best. Among the vegetables—corn, mature beans and peas, celery, okra and sweet potatoes are best for drying.

Beans and peas may be allowed to mature on the vine, but even these are stored more successfully after a short treatment in the dryer.

Steps in Drying

1. Select unblemished, firm, well ripened product.
2. Wash, pare when necessary, slice, quarter or leave whole.
3. Drop in salt water, in syrup or precook a few minutes.
4. Spread in thin layers on trays covered with cheese cloth.
5. Place in sun or dryer over heat.
6. Watch carefully, change trays when necessary.
7. Keep good air circulating—Increase temperature last half of drying.
8. Test when done—vegetables bone dry, fruit springy, leathery, but not moist or brittle.
9. Cool thoroughly.
10. Pack in clean, dry, air-tight containers, label and store in dry, cool place.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

Events are the best calendars, said an ancient sage. In 1872, the Charter, which was about to expire, was amended in Chapter 148, of the laws of Maryland, so that the word state was dropped from the name of the Society, and its official title became the Maryland Bible Society.

The corporation became unlimited in duration. In that year 21,150 volumes were distributed, and the American Bible Society received $3,000 for its nation-wide work as a gift from the Maryland Society.

Meanwhile $1,000 was spent on improvements to the building and southern grants totaling 605 volumes were made. In 1872 the American Bible Society began to carry on work among immigrants to America at the other end of the steamship line and work of distribution in Baltimore for this particular group was given up.

At the end of forty years the Maryland Bible Society had given the American Bible Society $54,357.80, had distributed 222,269 Bibles and 427,449 Testaments, and had received the sum of $362,157.84. The Ladles' Branch Society was employing four Bible readers in 1872-3, $2,000 was sent to the American Bible Society in this year, and 19,493 volumes were distributed. It was felt that the situation of the Bible House was unsuitable, and there was considerable agitation for a removal of the Society's home on Charles street. The report states that there was "great multiplication of special forms of charity," and that in the midst of this multiform solicitation there was danger that our cause, so quietly conducted and relying mainly upon not only the voluntary, but the spontaneous contributions of its friends, may be overlooked, or made to yield to what seems, at the moment, more imperative claims.

We find, however, that the fears entertained by the Society, like most of our fears, were groundless: for, in 1874, the new Bible House was built on the east side of Charles street above Fayette street, at an expense of $30,000 for lot and building.

The plan of financing this project is very interesting. The Fayette street building was mortgaged for $10,000, a ground rent of $10,000 was placed on the Charles street lot, and $10,000 was paid in cash to meet the cost. The upper floors of the new Bible House were occupied by the offices of the Johns Hopkins University and Hospital.

How different is the Baltimore of today from the quiet slowly moving town of sixty years ago! Those were the days of cobble stone streets and horse cars. Alexander Graham Bell was experimenting with his telephone; the automobile, the radio and the roentgen ray unknown; the business offices of the world's greatest university and hospital could be accommodated in the upper rooms of the little Bible House. As we look about us today from the mountain top of vision we can only exclaim with the prophet Balaam, "What hath God wrought."

Not the smallest factor in the progress of our city and state has been the stream of divine truth flowing steadily from its source, the Bible House, and fulfilling another prophecy, "And it shall come to pass that everything, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live."

TRURSDAY, JULY 28, 1932.

IN PERILOUS TIMES—CAUTION

It is rather strange that it should be so, and yet all our history demonstrates that in periods of deep adversity, when public and private debts harrass the people, when business is dull, when unemployment is widespread, it is the party and the program of conservatism that appeals most strongly to the voters.

It would seem as if the neutral trend under such circumstances would be towerd radicalism. It would seem as if the more revolutionary the program presented by a political party, the greater its popular appeal would be. "We have tried the old system," the people might be regarded as saying, "and it has brought us nothing but distress. Now let us face squarcly about and go ln the other direction. Things certainly can't get any worsc and there is a chance they may get better." That would seem to be the natural line of argument in times of economic stress and strain.

But our history does not bear out this assumption.

Times were terribly hard in the seventies, following the inflation period of the Civil War. Money was scarce, unemployment was widespread, business was at a standstill. It seemed to the superficial observer as if the situation were made to order for the radical. And so a political party arose which offered an unlimited issue of greenbacks, "easy money" which, the people were told, would advance prices, restore employment, stimulate business. The people listened to the alluring promises, they heard the specious arguments, and when election day came they voted for the Republican party which had painted no enticing pictures, had offered no magic formula, which had told them only that if kept in power it would resume specie payments, maintain the gold standard, stand by the principles of sound government laid dawn in the Constitution.

Times were hard again in the Nineties, terribly hard, and again the radical thought he saw his opportunity. Not greenbacks this time, but "Free Silver" was the battle cry, "easy money," bringing better prices, affording everybody employment. Again the people listened and weighed, and again they voted for the Republican party on the most conservative platform it had ever written. The sure instinct of the people warned them against entering upon unknown paths, against setting sail upon an uncharted sea.

And so in the present period of economic distress the trend of public sentiment is obviously away from radicalism. That was demonstrated in the primaries that preceded the national convention. It was demonstrated notably in Wisconsin and Iowa and Pennsylvania. For the first time in twenty-eight years there was not a radical delegation in the Republican convention from any state. The people turned grimly away from the "sure cure" doctors, from the fire alarm orators demanding that they about-face and march in the other direction, from the revolutionaries who shouted that everything that is, is wrong.

And that is what they are going to do at the coming election. They will scan the measures that were introduced in the last session of Congress and that were approved by the men who will control the government if the Democratic party is placed in power—measures that would fasten the dole upon America, that would debase our currency, that would add enormously to our interest-bearing debt, that would inevitably increase taxes with no corresponding benefit—and they will turn again to the party that always keeps its feet on the ground, that does not promise more than it can perform, that steers a steady course whether the weather be foul or fair.

POINTS NEED FOR OPTIMISM

"Ours is the rare privilege of helping to sound in the business world of today a note of optimism and idealism, of faith, of mutual helpfulness, of courage—a note that may be heard outside our crafts, even beyond our communities." This is the keynote of the message of Clinton P. Anderson, newly elected President of Rotary International, writing in the Rotarian magazine for July.

Mr. Anderson's message points out the need today for such organizations as Rotary, Chambers of Commerce and other civic organizations. "The world today . . . needs every mollifying influence it can claim," he says. "We may not be able to prevent international discord, yet we can stretch friendly hands across borders in an appeal for understanding and tolerance."

To the man whose business may not be paying dividends, he points out, whose investments may be melting away, whose stock of courage may be running low, such an organization as Rotary makes its greatest contribution.

"It warns him that he must not lose interest in those children of human relationships which are born of men working together. It tells him that he must count as an asset the man whose hand he has shaken, as well as the man to whom he has sold goods.

"For a few years we rode the crests. We measured our customers by what they did for us—not by what we did for them. We looked at our neighboring countries in much the same way.

"That was yesterday, and this is today. We will work gradually out of the depression as firms here and there find new formulea to induce the return of profitable trading . . . . New firms, new managements are destined to come. Our opportunity is not so much to correct the old as to direct the new."

Mr. Anderson is a former South Dakota newspaperman who now operate a large casualty insurance business in Albuquerque, New Maxico. His age is 36, and he is the youngest Rotarian to be elected to the presidency of Rotary International.

THE ERA OF 12 YEARS AGO

In his keynote address at the Democratic National Convention the other day, Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, reminded us that "twelve years ago we were drawing to the close of a great era." The era referred to was, of course, the great World War with, as the keynoter reminded us, "humanity's greatest expenditure of accumulated treasure."

There can be no gainsaying the fact that it was one of the world's greatest eras so far as its effect on the course of the world was concerned. We were told at the time that it was the era in which would be completed the war which was to end war for all time to come, that the titanic struggle would "make the world safe for democracy."

Just how true these slogans were, the country is now well aware. Since the close of the war democracy in many instances has been eliminated. Three great dictators have arisen, Mussolini in Italy, Stalin in Soviet Russia, and Pilsudski in Poland, and there have been a number of lesser ones. And if we can read the signs aright, more dictatorships are to follow in the near future, the most important one, imminent perhaps, in Germany.

Nor did the war to end all wars succeed in its purpose. We have had continual strife, both of a military and political nature, since the treaty of peace was signed. There have been revolutions on every hand, and the great nations of the world are now more heavily armed than at any time in their history.

Twelve years after the close of the era to which the Democratic keynoter referred we find the nations of the world in the grip of the greatest depression of the century, a depression due directly to the inflation which had its seeds in the era which saw "humanity's greatest expenditure of accumulated treasure."

We see now the great nations of Europe represented at Lausanne demanding on the one hand cancellation of reparations growing out of the war, and on the other demanding that Uncle Sam forgive the debts of the allied nations. And we hear in America the cry go up from the overburdened taxpayers that it is unfair to cancel these European debts and so add further to the troubles of the American citzenry.

Despite Senator Barkley's reference to the great era which ended with the closing days of the Wilson administration it is not unlikely that this era will be made an issue in the coming campaign. Doubtless the Republicans, remembering the results of the election of 1920 would welcome such an issue. It would give them the opportunity of reminding the voters that the seeds of the depression were sown in this era which ended twelve years ago, that the vast sums the payment of which European nations are now seeking to avoid, were loaned to Europe during this era, and that the results of government control of the railroads, the telephone, the telegraph and other great utilities, left a bad taste in the mouths of the American people which it took several years to eradicate.

THE DEMOCRATIC LIQUOR PLANK

"The shortest platform ever put out by a national party," boasts the chairman of the Resolutions Committee of the Democratic National Convention.

Perhaps it is.

But it might have been shorter still.

It might have contained but one plank, for it has but one plank that interested the convention which adopted it or that will interest the country.

That is the liquor plank.

In this plank the Democratic party goes all the way. It is not only wet, it is sopping wet, it is wringing wet, it is the last, ultimate, nth degree of wetness.

It "favors the repeal of the 18th Amendment," and it wants it, done RIGHT NOW. It "demands that the Congress IMMEDIATELY propose a constitutional amendment" to effect such repeal.

But it does not want to wait until the amendment has been repealed to get its liquor. It demands "IMMEDIATE modification of the Volstead act to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer and other beverages of such alcoholic content as is permissible under the Constitution." That is to say it demands that something that is not legal now be made legal right away.

But the convention did not content itself with merely declaring that the Democratic party is wet. It declared that all Democrats must be wet. Not in set terms to be sure. But by every implication and by the declarations of the leaders of the party again and again emphasized and repeated during the debate upon the platform. "You are making belief in repeal of the 18th Amendment a test of party loyalty," protested Senator Hull. "You bet we are," answered Governor Al Smith. "It has never been done before," wailed the Senator. "It is being done now," shouted the triumphing Governor. And the vast crowd that packed the Chicago stadium in gleeful anticipation of this moment booed the Senator till the walls bulged and cheered the Governor until the roof lifted. And thus a party whose slogan is personal liberty writes a platform which closes the door to personal liberty.

So that point is settled. No man or woman can be a Democrat in good standing anywhere in the forty-eight States of this grand and glorious Republic from this time forth unless he or she is for immediate repeal of the 18th Amendment and for immediate modification of the Volstead act to permit the manufacture of beer and other alcoholic beverages. How does that sound in the 33 states that were dry by their own action before the 18th Amendment was adopted? How does it set with Democratic congressmen who have made campaign after campaign as supporters of the 18th Amendment? How does it accord with the sentiment of voters in the Old South who four years ago broke away from all the political traditions of their section rather than support a candidate for President who then declared that he was for repeal of the 18th Amendment?

In his speech before the convention Tuesday night Jouette Shouse declared that for four years he and Chairman Raskob had been pressing steadily toward the goal which was now within their sight—to make the Democratic party the party of repeal. He certainly was entitled to his chortle of jubilation. He had won his fight. It was his hour of triumph. He, with the help of Mr. Raskob, had brought the Democratic party to the point where it was willing to stake all its chances of victory, perhaps to stake its very existence, on a fight for BEER!

And now what will the country have to say about it. For it is the country that has the last word. The tumult and the shouting of the convention will soon die away and be forgotten. Out in the country men and women will have time to think and quiet ln which to think. What will they say? Will they give their adherence to a party whose responsible leaders openly boast that for four years they have bent all their energies to bring about the result that was achieved at Chicago?

Here are some of the questions the leaders of the Democratic party will have frequent occasion to ask themselves during the coming four months.

A GOOD COMMUNITY HOBBY

A good community hobby is the fire department. And it is a hobby that pays every citizens dividends.

The days when second-rate "assembled" apparatus and untrained volunteer personnel were adequate, have definitely gone. Fire hazards grow greater every year. Increased use of power, petrolum products and machinery of all kinds ln homes and in business, means that a fire has a better chance to start.

Good fire departments are the community's insurance against disaster—and, from the standpoint of value, are as essentltl as a fire insurance polity. Tremendous strides have been made in the development of standard apparatus—apparatus capable of operating hour after hour, under the most difficult conditions, without loss in efficiency.

The fire department is worth any citizen's time. It should be cultivated, trained and equipped in accordance with the highest standards. It should be given every opportunity to perfect itself to the greatest possible degree.

Oakland has a community hobby like that, second to none.

Random Remarks

A SUMMER MORNING

By J. A. Hall, in the DeKalb (Ga.) New Era

This is written during the bright, fresh morning hours of a new summer day in the Georgia mountains. Several days and nights of rain have drenched the high peaks and lonely coves, and today everything seems to be making a new start in life. A brisk, sharp wind—a wind which feels like late autumn—rustles the fresh green leaves of the forest and overhead billowly white clouds drift eastward through the newly washed sky. The surface of the lake crawls before the wind with a thousand silvery dimples. There is no sound save the rustle of the leaves and there is no sign of life except some white object moving along the opposite shoreline. It may be a sheep; it may be a man. I see it for only a moment or two. It is gone. The mystery of the woods has swallowed it. What a vivid chapter in the history of life is thus completely written before my gaze. We are constantly seeing things—things, which for a moment, play a part ln the pictures which lies before our feeble, human vision and then disappear. Spectacular leaders mount the rising crest of popular attention. For a short time they are brought into the public gaze. The wave which has lifted them into notice does not stop. It cannot stop. It moves onward and subsides, carrying its driftwood down with lt; and the wave, which has once subsided, never returns. Other new waves takes its place. Like the white object which I discerned a few moments ago in the shadow of the distant lake shore, strange mysterious objects are constantly coming into view and passing swiftly lnto obscurity.

Only a few steps from where I sit the oak and pine forest is growing—each tree, after the manner of its family—just as such trees have grown for unmeasured ages and will continue to grow for other ages yet to come. So far as general appearances show, thc life of the forest is following the same course lt followed in the long gone past, but ln fact the eternal process of change never ceases for so much as a second. In the demotest solitude, no sundial, clock or calendar is needed to record the fact that time ls passing and leaving its footprints behind.

Everywhere in the woods, fresh new twigs have already recorded the year 1932, and every tree from the smallest shrub to the tallest pine has put on a new white ring under its bark. On many trees of the cone-bearing family, such as the white pine, each passing year is recorded by an artistic ring of branches extending symmetrically in all directions, making a perfect record of the age of the tree. Not only is the passage of time being daily and hourly written by the growing things but the record is constantly being cast up and filed away, so to speak, by the slower forces of erosion and rock building. Every shower of rain which passes through the mountain wilderness moves some of the sand which has been worn from the rocks higher up and thus the whole surface of the earth—even the highest and most majestic peaks—are undergoing perpetual change.

I once asker Dr. Charles Torrey Simpson, the well-known Florida naturalist, his view of the origin of Florida sand. "Oh, that is simple enough," he said, "it is Appalachian sand—the Wastage washed down from the Great Smokies and their surrounding mountain masses." Here I had a new and startling pictures of the way nature does things—the slow, almost imperceptible crawling of the sand, inch by inch, from the top of Clingman's Dome to the dunes of Key West.

By the calendar it is still midsummer, but in the woods can already be seen indications of approaching autumn. The leaves of the blackgum show russet and scarlet spots and the sourwood which is the first to give the blush of autumn color to the mountain landscape, is losing its pigment of green which is being replaced by tints of old rose, and the faint haze, which hangs over the sunlit slopes, brings a strikinfi reminder of Indian summer.

A summer day in the mountains to me symbolizes the life history of many people. During the morning hours the sunlight brightens the landscape—as the day advances a few clouds appear; their shadows follow each other across the rugged slopes. Midday may bring oppressive heat or driving storms of wind and rain. The rain ceases, the clouds pass, evening approaches, the sun sinks into a sea of gold and crimson, the peaks are veiled in purple, and the world is filled with nameless peace.

TOUR PROPOSED TO W. MD. VACATION GROUND

Deep Creek Lake Is Goal and Northwestern Pike. Suggested As The Best Route

ROAD IS NEW TO MANY

The Sunday Sun of the 10th inst., in addition to a suggested trip from Baltimore and points east to Western Maryland with a road map showing the proposed route, contained the following article relative thereto:

Travel westward was formerly limited to two routes, namely, the Old Trails National Pike, U. S. 40, and the Lincoln Highway, U. S. 30. Today the Northwestern Turnpike, U. S. 50, is as available to Baltimore and Maryland motorists as either of the other two roads, but it is surprising to note the number of persons who have not traveled this road and who are not aware of the scenic beauty through which it passes. This fact has been especially evident to the Automobile Club of Maryland, where inquiries are constantly received for "new places" and "new roads."

The eastern terminus of U. S. 50 is in Annapolis, Md., thirty-three miles east of Washington, but it is possible to eliminate the heavy traffic of the Annapolis Boulevard and Washington itself by cutting across country to the south and west. Leave the headquarters of the Automobile Club of Maryland, Mount Royal avenue and Cathedral street and take the familiar route to Frederick, a distance of forty-seven miles on U. S. 40. Leaving Frederick the route passes through scenic and historic country, through Braddock Heights, Middletown, and Boonsboro to Hagerstown.

Third City of State

This is Maryland's third city and has long been known as an important industrial center. The largest pipe-organ factory in the world is located here and the city is also known for the manufacture of bicycles and incubators. Its residence section is quite similar to that of Baltimore and Washington. In 1902 Hagerstown inaugurated the first traveling library in America and Washington county installed the first county library, the Washington County Free Library, in this country. There are branches in the small towns of the county which receive their books from the central library. A "book wagon," which was built for the purpose, carries 1,000 volumes, and tours the country regularly, delivering books from house to house.

From Hagerstown we take U. S. 11 to Martinsburg, W. Va., the county seat of Berkeley county. This is a region in which are located some of the largest limestone quarries in the United States. The largest plant in the world for the manufacture of men's hosiery is situated here. This, too, is the center of a large commercial apple-growing section, the annual output being about one-half million barrels.

No City Traffic

Continuing on U. S. 11, twenty-four miles farther south, we reach Winchester, also a great apple center and located on U. S. 50. This is an excellent road, traversing some wild and picturesque country. All of the towns along the route are comparatively small, relieving the motorist of city traffic. Far back in 1850 thru 1865 this was a heavily traveled stage coach road and was known as the Northwestern Turnpike, a name which continues to cling to it. Many thrilling tales are still told of those earlier days when the heavy stage coach, drawn by six horses, made its weekly passage, and stage coach robbery was the most remunerative racketeering project. We pass through Capon Bridge, Hanging Rock, Romney, and Junction to Red House. At Newcreek, a small town between Junction and Red House, magnificent views stretch away in all directions. From the top of Allegany Front Mountain, eight miles west of Newcreek, there ls an unusual view of Newcreek Mountain, outlined for five miles against the horizon.

From this section the route, of course, continues west, but our route turns north through Oakland, Md., on State Route 37. This is the county seat of Garrett county, where one finds nature in its wildest splendor. The soil here is extremely fertile, while coal, natural gas and some iron ore enrich the land value. There are vast forest reserves, great rock barriers, many streams and waterfalls, as well as Deep Creek Lake. This beautiful lake with its sixty-four miles of exquisite shore line, surrounded by mountain peaks and dense woodland seems symbolic of nature at its best, and one can hardly believe that it was made by man. It was formed by building a dam across Deep Creek and then stocked with mountain trout.

For many years it has been famed as a fisherman's paradise and groups of cottages and summer homes have been erected close to the water's edge. The whole section, with Deer Park and Mountain Lake Park close by, is famed as a summer resort. It is always cool here, high on the crest of the Alleghenies. During the late winter and early spring the vicinity of Oakland is the scene of great maple sugar activities.

Continuing north across the mountains and plateaus we arrive at Keysers Ridge on the National Pike, U. S No. 40. Here we turn east again, crossing the Alleghenies once more through scenery whose grandeur rivals that we have recently admired on U. S. No. 50. The road is well known, passing through Frostburg, Cumberland and Hagerstown, the point where we turned south to Winchester.

FEWER DEATHS REPORTED FOR FIRST HALF OF 1932

Number is 670 Less Than for Same Period Last Year

There were 670 fewer deaths reported in Maryland during the first six months of the current year than during the corresponding period of 1931. The decrease was especially marked in Baltimore City where 618 less were reported than during the first half of 1931. There were 52 fewer deaths in the counties.

A report prepared by the Bureau of Vital Statistics of the State Department of Health shows that 11,061 deaths were reported in the State from January 1 to June 30 of this year, 5,687 from Baltimore City and 5,374 from the counties. In 1931, the total for the same period was 11,731, of which 6,305 were reported from Baltimore City and 5,426 from the counties.

Over 5,700 deaths—51 per cent of the total reported in the State, from all causes, since the first of January—were due to what are known as the degenerative diseases, or diseases of middle life and of old age, that is, diseases of the heart, of the kidneys, cerebral hemorrhage or apoplexy, cancer and diabetes. Heart disease was responsible for 2,314 deaths; diseases of the kidneys for 1,244; cerebral hemorrhage for 976; cancer 968 and diabetes for 231 deaths.

The pneumonia and tuberculosis were responsible for 1,828 deaths—pneumonia for 1,033 and tuberculosis for 795—or 16 per cent of the total. The deaths from the diseases mentioned—the degenerative diseases, the pneumonia and tuberculosis—were responsible for two thirds of the total deaths from all causes. The remaining third was scattered among all other causes.

There were 14,480 births reported during the half year, 7,036 in Baltimore City and 7,444 in the counties, in comparison with 14,606 during the corresponding period of 1931, 7,147 in Baltimore City and 7,459 in the counties. STATE FURNISHES CHANGE OF SCENERY TO TOURISTS

Maryland Offers Best Vacation Sites From Garrett County to Waters of Atlantic Ocean

PRAISE GARRETT COUNTY

Vacation season is here again and Maryland furnishes without a question of doubt a more elaborate change of scenery than any state of its size in the Union, states E. Lee LeCompte, state game warden. Beginning at the Maryland-West Virginia line in Garrett county, with the peak of Snaggy Mountain rising to a height of 3500 feet, to the broad waters of the Atlantic Ocean in Worcester county, the scenery changes in practically every county thru which you pass.

Deep Creek Lake, located in Garrett county eight miles from the town of Oakland, is, without a doubt, one of the largest and most beautiful bodies of inland waters on this continent. This lake has been stocked heavily for the past few years with legal size brook and rainbow trout, small mouth black bass and pike. However, the waters are infested with the rock bass or what are known locally as tench which are a small species of fish but furnish great sport for the children. If you have never visited Deep Creek Lake, you should no so at once.

The waters of the Youghiogheny river furnish excellent trout and bass fishing and in that part of the river below Swallow Falls, rainbow trout may be taken legally July 1st to November 30th. The open season for fresh water trout closed in all other sections of the state on June 30. The open season for black bass (both large and small mouth) is July 1st to November 30, and Maryland furnishes some of the best black bass areas of any state along the Atlantic coast. You will enjoy a vacation along the many streams and lakes of Maryland above a point where the tide ebbs and flows, he said.

Maryland Beautiful

Maryland has been called "God's Country" and thousands of residents of our state have never seen its great beauties. Instead of going to some other state to spend your vacation, or abroad, become familiar with the scenic beauties of your own state. Those who enjoy the outdoors should not overlook Maryland's vacation possibilities. Tourists coming to the state by the thousands seem to appreciate the scenic beauty and natural resources to a greater extent than our own people. Undoubtedly we have the finest state highways in any state on this continent. From the Allegany Mountains at the West Virginia-Maryland line in Garrett county to Ocean City on the Atlantic Coast in Worcester county, the scenery changes practically every fifty miles and hundreds of camp sites are available throughout the entire route. Swallow Falls and Muddy Creek Falls in Garrett county are surpassed in size by many falls in this country but not in beauty. Deep Creek Lake, 12 miles in length and ½ to 1 mile in width, covering an area of approximately 6500 acres, furnishes excellent camping sites on its banks. The waters are cool due to the many mountain streams from which it is formed. The nights in this region in the hottest weather are delightfully cool and exhilerating.

The State Forestry Department of Maryland have added thousands of additional acres to their holdings and a permit can be secured for the asking to camp thereon. If you make application for this permit, be sure not to cause forest fires, thru carelessness or otherwise, which are not only detrimental to one of our greatest assets—wildlife—but the scars left by a forest fire are very unsightly and destroy scenic beauty wherever they occur, Mr. LeCompte concludcd.

Misses Ruth and Betty Marquis, of Cumberland, are here visiting their uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Harold H. Harned.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney J. Agnelly, and Misses Julia Ann and Mary Shaffer, of Roanoke, Va., spent the week-end with relatives in Oakland.

NEW GERMANY

Preparatory service will be conducted in the Reformed church Sunday morning at 10:30. Holy Communion will be administered in the same church Sunday morning, August 14.

Miss Jennie Durst visited Mr. and Mrs. William Durst Saturday evening.

Walter Alexander and family, of LaVale, are spending this week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Leland Swauger.

Miss Grace Otto is the guest for a week of Miss Mary Jane Felix at Johnstown, Pa.

Quarterly meeting and Holy Communion service was held in the M. E. church here last Sunday, which was well attended. The Rev. John L. Wolfe, District Superintendent, delivered the message of the evening.

Mrs. C. J. Otto spent Tuesday evening at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Floyd Broadwater.

Leland Swauger and family and Stanley Swauger visited at the home of Lee Layman on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Fresh entertained guests from Hagerstown over the week-end.

Quite a number of the people from this community witnessed the presentation of the Passion Play given in the Lutheran church at Grantsville Tuesday night.

Misses Alverta and Leola Broadwater and Messrs. Parker and Gordon Warnick were Sunday evening visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Durst.

S. L. Otto and family, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Otto and Homer Broadwater spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Kamp.

The Ark and The Dove of Maryland

LITTLE-KNOWN SHIPS WHICH HELPED IN FOUNDING THIS OLD COLONY

By LOUIS H. BOLANDER,
(In the Baltimore Sunday Sun.)

Sometimes in the history of the race there are ships as well as men that earn undying fame. To the English-speaking world, the Santa Maria that carried the venturesome Columbus to a New World and the Golden Hind that earned for Sir Francis Drake deathless glory, vie for honors with the Mayflower that brought the Pilgrim Fathers to the "stern and rockbound coasts" of New England. Around these three little ships cluster a wealth of associations dear to every patriotic English and American heart. New Englanders have perpetuated the memory of the Mayflower in narrative, song and story so that her name has become a household word wherever the English tongue is heard.

But who outside of Maryland ever heard of two little ships called the Ark and the Dove? And how few in the Free State itself could give but a sketchy account of their career? Yet these two gallant little ships brought the first band of settlers to St. Mary's, and thus played their part in shaping the destinies of Maryland and, ultimately, of the future United States of America.

Who built these two little ships or when we do not know. Nor do the British archives, as yet, reveal their ultimate fate. Did they rot down at some English wharf, or did they founder in some sharp gale on the Western Ocean? Or were they broken up to serve the purposes of some mere landsman?

We do not know. It is quite possible that their timbers may still form the framework of some barn or outbuilding in rural England, and their present owner know nothing whatever of their intriguing history. Such a mundane fate has overtaken many a lordly bark that has outlived any number of Atlantic gales. The ill-fated Chesapeake, captured by the British in the War of 1812, was converted into the framework of a mill still in use in rural Hampshire, her timbers still showing the effects of the Shannon's deadly fire. And even the timbers of the Mayflower herself are believed to form the framework of a barn some twenty miles from London.

Unlike the Mayflower, which was a ship chartered for the specific purpose of carrying the Pilgrims to the New World, both the Ark and the Dove seem to have been employed regularly by George Calvert, the first Lord Baltimore, and there is good reason to believe that he owned a large share of each of them.

These two ships make their debut in history through the medium of a letter written by Baltimore to the Earl of Baltimore, and a doughty entrance it was. Baltimore had established a colony at Avalon on the southeastern peninsula of Newfoundland sometime before his Maryland project was thought of. In July, 1627, he and his family paid a visit to Avalon to see how his colonists were making out. While he was there word came that some English fishing vessels in a nearby harbor had been attacked by three French ships under the command of a Gallic adventurer named De la Rade. Two of the English fishing shallops had been captured by De la Rade's men, and all their fish and provisions confiseated. Calvert was appealed to for protection and he responded with hearty good will. He graphically describes his future actions in a letter to Buckingham:

> Send them assistance with two ships of mine, one of 360 tons and twenty-four pieces of ordinance, another bark of sixty tons with three or four small guns in her and about 100 men aboard us in all. These ships being discovered to move by a scout whom the French kept at the harbor's mouth, they stayed not weighing anchor but let slip their cables and away to sea as fast as they could, leaving their booty and sixty-seven of their own men behind them on shore for haste. We gave them chase, but could not overtake them. . . Within a few days after advice was given that De la Rade was gone into the Bay of Conception, some twenty leagues to the northward of this place, and there committed more spoil; whereupon I sent forth the great ship again, with all the seamen I had there and one of my sons with some gentlemen and others that attend me in this plantation.

These "two ships of mine" were the Ark nnd the Dove, and their first "break" into history was when they forced that gentleman of fortune De la Rade to slip his cables and put to sea in such haste that he was forced to abandon about one-fifth of his men. Calvert, in his letter, explains that De la Rade had been driven off a second time by another British ship before his "great ship," the Ark, could come up with him.

The Ark then returned to a "harbor called Trepassee," where they found six French fishing vessels with their holds laden with the season's catch. These they captured and sent to England "for the hurt they have done us." This latter procedure on the part of the Ark was more than a little irregular, for neither the Ark nor her consort was furnished with letters of marque and had no legal right to make prizes of French ships or of ships of any other nation. The hundred men sent on this expedition were probably recruited from English ships lying off Avalon, as the regular crews of the two ships would scarcely have totaled half that number.

Calvert describes one of his ships as of 360 tons and 24 pieces of ordnance. This was, of course, the Ark. The other, he says, was of 60 tons. He furnishes us with no further description of either ship. The admiralty records describes the "Ark of Maryland" as of 350 tons, and the Dove as of 50 tons. Father White, the priest who came with the Ark to Maryland and who took it upon himself to be the chronicler of the voyage, says the Ark was a "shipp as strong as could be made of oake and iron, 400 tunne, kingbuilt."

Not another scrap of description of either ship has come down to us, and even the tonnage figures vary considerably. But Father White was no seaman, so his tonnage figure for the Ark can hardly be relied upon. Thus it seems best to believe that their owner knew more about his ships than anyone else, and that the Ark was of about 360 tons burden, and the Dove of 60 tons.

With these figures to guide us, and from our knowledge of the build and rig of merchant ships of the first half of the seventeenth century, it is quite possible to present a very fair idea of the appearance, size and rig of both vessels—thanks to R. C. Anderson, of Southampton, England, an official of the Society for Nautical Research and editor of The Mariner's Mirror, who has supplied invaluable suggestions. The chief difficulty in estimating their size arises from the fact that we do not know whether the tonnage ascribed to either ship meant "tonnage" or "tons and tonnage." The term "tonnage" was the approximate capacity of a ship's hold in terms of tons of wine, while "tons and tonnage" was supposed to be her capacity for a deadweigth of cargo in bulk, and was one and one-third times the former. That is, if a vessel could carry 300 tons of wine, she would be able to carry 400 tons of cargo in bulk.

Now as the Ark carried but a small crew, about 40 men, it seems reasonable to suppose that the 360 tons figure given by Calvert represents a "ton and tonnage" figure, and that her tonnage expressed in tons of wine would be about 270. On the proportions of a typical merchantman of 1625, and she was no doubt built by or before that date, she would have a keel of 74 feet, a beam of 28 feet inside the plank, and a depth of 13 feet measured from a point of her greatest breadth to the top of her keel. Her length from stem to sternpost would be about 120 feet, or the length of the keel plus the beam.

To arrive at the above figures a simple formula is used of keel-length times the breadth times the depth divided by 100, whose quotient leaves us with the approximate "tonnage" figures. Using the same formula, the Dove with a "tons and tonnage" burden of 60, would have a "tonnage" figure of 45. This would give her a keel of 42 feet, a beam of 15, and a depth of 7 feet, while her length from stem to sternpost would be about 57 feet.

Calvert wrote that the Ark carried 24 guns. As many as 14 of these might have been in the upper deck, 6 to 8 on the lower deck, and probably as many as 4 upon her quarterdeck. It is possible that on her voayge to Maryland some of these gun ports would be left empty, but this seems hardly likely, as they were uncertain just what kind of reception they might meet with on those strange shores, and would be likely to sail armed to the teeth.

Her rig would be three masts and a bowspirit, with square course and topsails on both fore and main. The mizzen would be a lateen with a square topsail above it. On the bowsprit there would be a spritsail, with a spritsail topsail on a small mast standing upright at the bowsprit end. There might be topgallants on the fore and main, but these would possibly be left behind. It is possible, too, that the spritsail topsail and mizzen topsail would be left unrigged. The tops would be round, and there would be four of them, one on each mast and one on the bowsprit. There would be no reefing gear anywhere. The courses would be fitted with detachable "bonnets" fitted by means of a lacing. There would be no staysails and it is very unlikely that there would be stunsails. All the braces of the foremast went to the corresponding stays of the mainmast about halfway along between the two stays and thence down to the deck. One cannot be certain of the Dove's rig. She might have been a two-master, but they had very small three-masters in her day.

Steering was done with the "whipstaff," a lever fitted on a pin at the end of the tiller passing loosely as a lever, and partly, by sliding through its pivot, as a direct pushrod on the tiller. In bad weather it had to be disconnected and the ship steered with tackles. This whipstaff could do little more than keep the ship on her course after she had been got there by trimming her sails.

The comforts and conveniences on shipboard of the first white men and women who came to Maryland were few indeed. Of luxuries they had none and the items deemed absolutely necessities by the modern trans-atlantic passenger were for the most part lacking. There would be cabins under the after end of the quarterdeck and perhaps another under the poop. But these would be occupied by the ship's officers and the leaders of the expedition. The majority of the passengers would be carried in temporary quarters on the lower deck.

Some sort of stove would be carried amidships for cooking and heating purposes, but a most primitive affair. No doubt it was but a tripod sandbox such as Columbus used on his celebrated voyage nearly a century and a half before. Cooking had to be done in a kettle suspended from this tripod or with a skillet held in the hand over the flames. We can be certain that in storms and heavy weather our Maryland forefathers ate their victuals cold, and were with no fire at all, no matter how chilly the weather might be.

The ship's boat would normally be stowed over the main hatch, but since in pleasant weather the hatches would be kept open as much as possible, it is likely it was towed astern. The accommodations on the Dove must have been very similar to those on her consort.

After their encounter with De la Rade's fleet nothing more is heard of the two ships for six years. But as Calvert called them the "two ships of mine" they must have been in his service and very likely made at least one trip between his Newfoundland colony and Merrie England each year. But in 1633 they were destined to play an important role in American affairs and to aid in giving birth to one of the thirteen original colonies of the United States. In this six-year period George Calvert had died and his oldest son, Cecil Calvert, the second Lord Baltimore, had acquired the charter of Maryland. On June 20, 1632, this charter was confirmed and published, and the new Lord Baltimore at once set about his preparations for colonization.

The Ark and the Dove, most certainly his property now, having been part of his father's estate, were fitted out at his personal expense, said to have been about £40,000. His two brothers, Leonard and George, were to go with the expedition, and Leonard was to act as lieutenant-governor under him. Despite the opposition of the planters in Virginia, who seemingly wanted this new world to themselves, the King's Council ordained that

> Whereas, the good ship called the Ark of Maryland of about 350 tons whereof one Lowe is master, is set forth by our very good Lord, the Lord Baltimore, for his Lordship's plantation at Maryland, in America, and manned with about 40 men. For as much as his Lordship hath desired that the men belonging to his said ship may be free from press or interruption, these are to will and require you to forbear to take up or press any—the officers, seaman, mariners, or others belonging to said ship—either in her voyage to Maryland or her return to England.

This order was to free Baltimore from the danger of having his crew seized by a British press gang for service on board one of His Majesty's ships-of-war.

In the public record office, and especially in the Courts of the Admiralty, there are still to be found papers relating to the two ships and their famous voyage. One such record gives the agreement made with the master of the pinnance Dove. His name was Richard Orchard, and he appears to have been a source of much worry and anxiety to Leonard Calvert throughout the course of the whole undertaking, a veritable "villain of the piece."

This agreement was made not only with Lord Calvert, but with Leonard Calvert, Mr. Jeremie Hawlye, Mr. Thomas Cornwallis and Mr. John Sanders. Sanders had at this time a one-eighth interest in the Dove, so it is likely that Hawlye, Cornwallis and Leonard Calvert himself had also some share, however small, in the ownership of the pinnace.

Judged by the purchasing power of money of the present day, the officers' wages seem to be absurdly meager, but they were probably considered reasonable in the first half of the seventeenth century. Orchard was to get 4 pounds a month; his mate, Samuel Lawson, 2 pounds 10 shillings; his boatswain, Richard Kenton, and his gunner, John Games, 1 pound 2 shillings each. Two other men mentioned in the agreement, John Curke and Nicholas Perrie, very likable able seamen, were to get 1 ponud each month. This agreement was signed by Lord Baltimore himself.

Lesson for July 31

THE GIVING OF MANNA

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 16:1-36.
GOLDEN TEXT—Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of lights. —James 1:17.
PRIMARY TOPIC — Bread from Heaven.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Bread from Heaven.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—God's Daily Gifts.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God's Daily Gifts.

I. Lusting for the Fleshpots of Egypt (vv. 1-12).

1. Murmuring against Moses and Aaron (vv. 1-3). As they journeyed from Elim into the great wilderness, they became conscious of the scarcity of some of the things they had enjoyed even in Egyptian slavery. Only a few days before they were singing God's praises for their wondrous deliverance at the Red sea (Exod. 15). Many complain bitterly of their experience in the service of God, while at the same time they will endure all sorts of hardships uncomplainingly when pursuing their own selfish interests. Their complaint not only displayed ingratitude but a deep-seated impiety. They went so far as to express the wish that they had died in Egypt with full stomachs rather than to be walking in the wilderness by faith. The very fact that God had gone to so much trouble to deliver them should have convinced them that he would not forsake them now.

2. God's answer to their murmurings (vv. 4-12).

(a) He promised to rain bread from heaven (vv. 4, 5). His purpose was to teach them that man liveth not by bread alone, but by every word that proceeded out of the mouth of the Lord (Deut. 8:3).

(b) He promised to give them a vision of his glory (vv. 6-10). This served as a warning and encouragement. Moses and Aaron told the children of Israel that the glory of the Lord should be seen in the morning as a reminder that their murmuring was against the Lord and not against themselves.

(c) He promised them flesh and bread (vv. 11, 12). "At even ye shall eat flesh, and in the morning ye shall be filled with bread."

II. Quails and Manna Given (vv. 13-15).

At the appointed time God gave the Israelites the promised food. He first allowed them to feel their need to show them that man's highest need is not physical food, but living faith and fellowship with God. He followed this with a display of his glory, showing them that he was able and willing to supply their need if they would but trust and obey him.

1. In the evening the quails came up (v. 13). Since they desired flesh, he gave them flesh to eat. God frequently caters to the desires of his people, knowing that the best way to teach them is to allow them to be filled with their own folly.

2. In the morning God gave the manna (vv. 14, 15). The Israelites did not know what it was. Moses told them it was the bread which the Lord had given them to eat.

III. The Responsibilities of the Israelites (vv. 16-31).

1. They must gather a certain portion daily (v. 16). They must look to God for their daily bread (Matt. 6:11).

2. Every man must gather for himself (v. 16). Every man must appropriate Christ for himself.

3. They must not gather in excess of one day's supply (vv. 18-20). Those whose greed prompted them to do so realized their mistake when it became corrupt and bred worms. Christian grace and Bible truth must not be hoarded up—they are only good when put to use.

4. The manna must be gathered fresh every morning (v. 21). This was to be done early before the sun was up. So must we seek Christ, who is our manna, every day, and the first thing in the day (John 6:37).

5. The manna must be eaten to preserve life. They were in a wilderness, so could live only by the eating of the food which God gave. It is so with Christ, "except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, ye have no life in you" (John 6:53).

6. Due consideration should be given to the Sabbath day (vv. 22-31). A double portion was to be gathered the day before, so as to keep inviolate the Sabbath day.

IV. Manna Kept as a Memorial (vv. 32-36).

This was to be kept as a reminder of God's favor in feeding them in the wilderness, even for supplying them with bread for forty years until they reached the promised land.

PITHY PICK-UPS

The King's Council having given the necessary permission, the provisioning and fitting out of the ships was undertaken immediately. On August 23, 1633, 4 "Sacars ordnance waying 99 ct. 1 qr." in all were delivered on board of the Ark, and "ffower Demiculleverins" were also sent aboard. These latter were heavier guns, each about 30 hundredweight.

We do not know whether these guns were purchased to take the place of some of the twenty-four guns of the Ark which were part of the ship's equipment at Avalon, or whether they were meant to supplement these guns. But some of the guns of the two ships were mounted on the fort at old St. Mary's for the protection of the new settlers. One of these guns was recovered from the bed of St. Mary's river in 1822 and later presented to the State of Maryland. It was finally mounted on State House Hill, where it stands to this day. The bore of a demiculverin (it is scarcely safe to follow the free-and-easy spelling of early seventeenth century scribes) was 4½ inches. And the bore of the gun now standing on State House Hill is also approximately 4½ inches. So it is quite possible that one of the cannon mounted on board of the Ark that August day nearly three centuries ago is the very gun around which the children of Annapolis play today.

The amount of liquor brought on board the ships seems scarcely credible: 12 pipes of Canary wine for the Ark, "one hundred five tonne of Beare for the use of the right honoble the Lord Baltimore & other gentlemen," "ffive Toun of harbr Beare received for the ship Ark & the pinnace Dove." This invoice was signed by the purser, John Bowlter. And again "Beer Del'd to the ship Arke, Richard Lowe, Mr. for the use of the Right honorable Lord Baltimore: 28 in harbour beere, more tenn ton, mor thirtie five ton, more sixtie ton." It does seem hardly possible that these two ships could have carried so much alcoholic stimulant in addition to all the settlers' supplies, the provisions necessary for the voyage, besides their passengers and crews. But it is certain that our Maryland forbears were determined to make up with an ample supply of malt liquors for all the inconveniences and hardships incident to the projected venture.

Nor were all of these liquors paid for in cash. For on May 16, 1634, one Jones sued Baltimore for 309 pounds 14 shillings 6 pence to pay him for 4½ tons of Canary wine, as well as the cannon furnished his ship. And on June 2 and July 5 of the same year a certain Leonard sued him for the price of fifteen barrels of small beer and for beer valued at over 6 pounds while the vessels were in harbor; while for the voyage and plantations a suit was entered for 194 tons in all. Leonard's total bill amounted to 608 pounds 15 shillings.

In October, everything being ready, the two ships set sail. But on the 19th, Coke, the Secretary of State, informed Admiral Penington "that the Ark, Richard Lowe, master, carrying men for Lord Baltimore to his new plantation in or about New England, had sailed from Gravesand contrary to order . . . not having taken the oath of allegiance." Penington was directed to have the expedition brought back. So the two ships were again anchored near Gravesand and were visited by Edward Watkins, the London Searcher, who made his report to the Privy Council: "I found a ship and pinnace belonging to the Right Honorable Cecil Lord Baltimore where I offered the oath of allegience to all and every person aboard, to the number of about 128, who took the same."

The vessels were then allowed to leave the Thames and stopped at the Isle of Wight, where the Jesuit Father White and others who had previously left the ship were probably taken on board. White himself took passage on the Ark. On November 22, 1633, they left the isle for the New World and their great adventure.

The details of the voyage are generally known and are based, of course, on the account written by Father White. Soon after leaving the Isle of Wight the ships ran into a heavy storm and became separated. Those on board the Ark thought never to see their comrades again, but both ships weathered the storm and were reunited in the West Indies. Heavy weather continued throughout November, but > from this time to our journeys end, about 3 monethes, we had not one howre of bad weather, but soe prosperous a navigation, as our mariners never saw so sweet a passage: when I say 3 months I meane not we were so long at sea, but reckon the time spent at Barbadoes and St. Christopher's, for we were at sea onely 7 weekes and 2 daies, wch is held a speedy passage.

For after leaving England they had set their course to the West Indies, whence they sailed for Virginia, arriving there February 27, 1634. Meeting with a none too friendly reception there, they set sail again, and came into Chesapeake Bay, "at the mouth of Patomecke" on March 3, 1634. Of their subsequent trials and adventures much might be written, but in has been recounted too often by able historians to justify repeating here. But it is certain that with their arrival in Chesapeake Bay Leonard Calvert's troubles were by no means ended.

And one of his chief sources of disturbance seems to have been the master of the Dove. These troubles come to light through a suit brought by Richard Orchard, the Dove's commander, against Leonard Calvert, Hawley, Cornwallis and Saunders (or Sanders) on February 5, 1636, upon his return to England. And on April 1, 1636, or about two months later, he brought suit against Lord Baltimore himself, who brought counter-suit against him.

Baltimore asserted that Orchard had contracted to obey Baltimore's directions and return to London, while no payment of wages was to be made until the end of the twelve months or of the completed voyage. If the voyage lasted more than twelve months, a part should be paid at the end of the twelve months and the remainder when the voyage was completed. Baltimore also claimed that some payment had been made Orchard in Virginia. The contract was drawn on September 30, 1633, and Orchard's and his crew's wages started on October 16, 1633, the probable date of the first departure. These wages continued until November 19, 1634, the date of his desertion from his ship.

Baltimore claimed that Orchard had not followed his instructions, as he had agreed to do. He had been told to use his best efforts to keep company with the Ark, but that if he should become separated he should go to St. Christophers and there wait for his consort. But instead he had gone to a more southerly island to look after his personal interests and to seek to recover a debt owing to him. The Ark reached Barbadoes a week before the Dove and waited there for it a week. After leaving Barbadoes the Dove again parted company, and made two stops on the voyage to Virginia, meanwhile being chased by a Spanish frigate and narrowly escaping capture.

After her final arrival in Maryland, in June, Governor Calvert ordered Orchard to proceed with the Dove to Massachusetts, there to trade for fish and other commodities and to return with all possible speed. But Orchard spent the greater part of the summer on this New England voyage, not arriving in Boston harbor until August 29, and then remained there over a month. The Governor claimed that if Orchard had shown due diligence he could have made the whole voyage in seven or eight weeks, but instead took over three months, and then returned to Virginia in November, 1634, thus preventing his finishing matters within a year.

There in Virginia he found Calvert and Hawley, who on November 19 came on board the Dove and ordered Orchard to proceed with her to Maryland. But Orchard refused in "a mutinous and insolent manner" and told them that the "pinnace should not budge from thence" until he was satisfied for his wages. They promised him if he would but take her to Maryland the entire wages should be paid Orchard and his men refused. But three days later he came on board and claimed that he had paid his crew all or part of what was due them and demanded pay from Calvert. Calvert refused, since he probably did not have enough ready cash with him. Orchard then went to the Governor and Council of Virginia with his complaint. These gentlemen heard the matter and, probably having no love for Calvert, ordered Orchard paid, but if Captain Orchard's statement can be believed, no payment was made.

Orchard now claimed £200 for damages. Calvert claimed that while Orchard was absent from the ship a great storm arose and the ship was greatly endangered by his absence. When Orchard visited the ship on November 22 he brought with him not only his crew but "divers others," who behaved themselves in a most insolent and disagreeable manner, claiming they would keep possession of the Dove for their wages. Finally Orchard and his men left the ship altogether. Calvert was now forced to hire another crew for the short run to Chesapeake at considerable expense. And this crew would not carry her on to England, so that they were forced to leave her in Maryland, together with much valuable goods. Baltimore claimed that because of this desertion he suffered £1,000 damage. It would be interesting to know how these various suits and counter-suits were settleld.

How the Dove got back to England, or whether she ever did get back, it would also be interesting to know. Orchard and his crew evidently took passage or shipped on another vessel for home, for he was in England when he brought suit against Calvert in 1636. No troubles of a serious nature seem to have developed with Captain Lowe, of the Ark, but her final fate also is a mystery.

Architectural Features in the Garden

Architectural features may easily give a note of interest or charm to a garden, if appropriately placed in proper surroundings, in the opinion of W. R. Ballard, specialist in landscape gardening of the University of Maryland Extension Service. He cautions, however, that it is easy to make the mistake of including too many such features, especially in small gardens.

The effect of a few well-placed items is soon spoiled, he says, when so many features are added as to nullify the effect. So many gardners, he states, must have a bird bath, lily pool, rock garden, sun dial, summer house, arch, pergola, garden seats, and so on, that it finally resolves istelf into a collection of features, rather than an effective garden unit. It usually is wise to err on the side of too few features than on the side of too many, in the opinion of this specialist.

One of the most important precautions to take after a concrete lily pool is completed, according to Mr. Ballard, is to fill it with water and let stand for about a week, then drain and clean thoroughly. Unless this procedure is followed, he states, the fish and other animals may be killed or severely injured by the excess lime and other chemicals. He cautions about use of water from systems in which calcium chloride is used as a disinfectant. Much chloride of lime, he says, is distinctly harmful to animal life in the pool.

Dusting roses with powdered sulphur, or spraying with Bordeaux mixture, will prevent mildew. However, if treatment is delayed until the mildew has fully developed, control measures will be of little value.

"Judging the Ornamental Garden" is the title of a circular just issued by the University of Maryland Extension Service. It is written by Mark M. Shoemaker, specialist in landscape gardening, and was prepared at the request of the Federated Garden Clubs of Maryland. An especially helpful fenture of the publication is a "Table of Judging Points"; each point is clearly explained. It is intended to be of help to those who act as judges of garden and home grounds contests and also to those who enter such contests. Those desiring a copy of this circular can obtain it by addressing requests to the Extension Service at College Park. It is Circular No. 96.

MT. LAKE PARK

The Park M. E. church services for Sunday, July 31, are as follows: Church school, 10 a. m.; morning worship, 11 a. m. The sermon will be delivered by Rev. Roy McCuskey, D. D., president of Wesleyan college, Buckhannon, W. Va.

There will be no evening service.

The lowest estimate placed five thousand visitors at the Park on last Sunday. Of that number at least 3500 were in The Bowl enjoying the program. And how did Miss Huff do it? We mean, how in the name of common sense did she radiate enough enthusiasm to get that bunch of kiddies together—a vested choir? Loch Lynn led the procession of youngsters to the platform, with Credton Ford and Jay Bell keeping time on the snare and bass drums and Earl Howard Sterling, Jr., as soloist.

The Queen Sylvia Band of Elkins, rendered some delightful music. We didn't catch the name of the 86-year old soloist from Harrison county, W. Va., but his singing was an interesting flareback to the old-timey inspirational tunes.

There were many things that impressed us during the afternoon and we certainly got a new slant on the projected plans for this mountain top from the interesting and more or less personal reminiscent address of Nat T. Frame, in which he partly covered his 20-year experience in Extension work in West Virginia.

After all there is something, intangible but certain, in the mountain and glade land that fascinates and grips the visitor, especially after recurring visits, as well as the permanent resident.

A case in point concerns a guest at the Mrs. M. M. Schrock cottage. We are advised that Mrs. Schrock has been operating a boarding house for the past thirty-five years here at the Park. Among the very first guests to be entertained was one who is here again this year. So it has been every year during the summer months since William McKinley was President of the United States.

We might mention many familiar family names, the fathers and mothers of whom now have children who think the summer incomplete without a few weeks, or even months, spent among the mountains. The urge to visit with us may be dormant, but it can be awakened.

We are not advised what printing establishment is responsible for the program of the Interdenomination Summer School of Missions, but it is certainly an attractive folder, both from a mechanical and artistic standpoint.

And by the way the School is certainly interdenominational. We find the following churches represented: Amish, Baptist, Lutheran, Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Protestant, Methodist South, Congregational, Presbyterian, United Brethren and Christian. The school will be in session from July 30 to August 5, inclusive.

Last Sunday a party who had nothing better to do just at the moment, reports the following states were represented on the Oakland-Mountain Lake Road, as shown by the auto license plates: New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, District of Columbia, Indiana, Michigan, Florida, Oklahoma, and Kentucky. That certainly is interstate, if it is not interdenominational.

The Thirteenth Annual Tennis Tournament, Western Maryland championship, will be held August 8 to 13. This tournament is sactioned by the United States Lawn Tennis Association and is held under the auspices of the Women's Civic Club of the Park.

Something should be done about speeding automobiles on the State road from the Braethorn corner to the postoffice. Monday a truck gave the passing signal to a roadster going in the same direction. The driver of the front car did not agree with the truck driver and stepped on the gas and shot out in front. When the two cars passed the writer both apparently had the gas throttle down to the floor boards and were hitting around fifty and there was not over two feet between the rear bumper of one and the front bumper of the other. There were at least two other witnesses. Neither car slowed down at the Bowling Alley cross street. It was certainly a dangerous exhibition of the utter disregard of the safety of other persons.

ANNUAL TENNIS TOURNEY BEGINS MONDAY AT PARK

Expert Tennis Players Are Listed Among Entries Including Defending Champions

TROPHIES ARE OFFERED

Scores of expert tennis players from all sections will arrive at Mt. Lake Park over the week-end, all primed to commence play in the Thirteenth Annual Western Maryland Tennis Tournament, which is held each year under the auspices of the Women's Civic club. Play will begin Monday morning and continue throughout the week.

All events known to tennis enthusiasts are listed, and prizes are provided for all winners and runners-up in the singles and doubles matches. Chief interest centers in the prospective winners of the two silver Challenge Cups, which are competed for annually, in men's singles and women's singles, and for the permanent possession of which three victories are needed, but not necessarily in successive years. The temporary custodians of these trophies are Randolph Shields, of Winchester, Va., and Miss Frances Grimes, of Morgantown, W. Va., winners of last year's tournament. They will return the Cups for further competition, and accept challenges from other star players who will question their right to retain possession for another year.

B. F. Arkle, of Wheeling, W. Va., and Bob Considine, of Washington, D. C., have each won the men's Cup once; Miss Mary Will Wakeford, of Mobile, Ala., and Miss Margaret Carspecken, of Morgantown, each have their names inscribed once on the women's Cup. Miss Carspecken recently became West Virginia State Champion by her success at White Sulphur Springs. She will enter this Tournament as a serious contender for first honors in the women's events.

Prominent among entrants in the men's events will be, as in past years, the three O'Loughlin brothers of Pittsburgh. This tennis family has contributed much to the popularity of the Western Maryland Tournament, and Dave, John or Bill may be expected to again match strokes with the present champion.

Drawings will be made and schedule of matches arranged by a committee of which Ralph Weber is chairman. He will be assisted by the following: G. A. Sawin, East Pittsburgh, Pa.; Edgar Hammer, Greensburg, Pa.; J. Howard Moore, Pittsburgh; Lou Florain, Washington, Pa.; Will Weber, Clarksburg, W. Va.; A. O. Smith, Beckley, W. Va.; B. F. Arkle, Wheeling, W. Va.; Frances Walker, Washington, D. C.; George Henderson, Cumberland; Charles Hodge, Morgantown; W. Va.; Bernard Welsh, Rockville, Md.; Charles Trask, Charleston, W. Va.

Social events are also attractions at this tournament, and are scheduled for Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings. As in past years, Mrs. Elizabeth Talson will preside over the Social Committee, the other members of which are: Mrs. Charles Bolgiano, Mrs. Wm. Bartholew, Mrs. W. L. Camden, Mrs. H. E. Stockslager, Mrs. Harry Bran, Mrs. Elmer Murphy, Mrs. Willoughby Chesley, Mrs. W. N. Skyles, Mrs. A. A. Richards, Mrs. Howard Dowlin, Mrs. H. V. Leighton, Mrs. W. D. Grimes, Mrs. W. B. Simpson, Miss Mary Ruhl, Miss Myrtie Finnell, Mrs. Elwood Offutt and Miss Isabel Hardie.

Miss Katherine McClain, treasurer of the finance committee, reports a favorable advance sale of reserved seats on the Club House porch and covered stand, and other indications point to the usual liberal patronage of local residents which this Tournament has enjoyed in previous years. The reserved seat tickets for the week, and the players' entry tickets, are also food for admission to the social events.

Howard Dowlin, secretary, has charge of entries and will be glad to welcome any ambitious local players.

Lake Continues to Drop

The water level of Deep Creek Lake continues to drop as the power house at Sines is generating electricity 18 hours every day. The Lake has dropped 5 inches since midnight Sunday and the depth is now 53.55 feet or approximately nine feet below the spillway.

More electricity is being generated by the plant than ever before, and has been in operation 18 hours each day all summer.

PUREBRED RAM SHOW TO BE HELD ON SEPTEMBER 3

About Twenty Hampshires and Shropshires to be Offered

The second annual purebred ram show and sale will be held in Oakland on Saturday, September 3, according to information just received by John H. Carter, county agent, from K. A. Clark, University of Maryland Extension Service. This is the first official notice of the show and sale Mr. Carter has received.

This event is held under the joint auspices of the University of Maryland Extension Service and the Maryland Stockmen's Association. Last year farmers and sheepmen from all parts of the county gathered here for the show and sale. Twenty purebred rams sold for an average of $17.90 per head.

The buyers of rams in last year's sale have been well pleased with the lambs sired by these purebreds, according to reports made to the county agent. The rams in this year's offering will include about 20 head from several of the leading Maryland and Pennsylvania flocks. Most of them will be Hampshries and Shropshires.

A special feature is the show of the rams consigned. This will take place at one o'clock, to be followed immediately by the auction. The show will take place in the Baltimore and Ohio yards in Oakland.

SUMMER MISSION SCHOOL IS BEING WELL ATTENDED

Interesting Programs Being Presented Daily at the Park

The Interdenominational School of Missions, being directed by Mrs. F. I. Johnson at Mountain Lake Park, is drawing large numbers of people from many sections of the country who come to remain all day or for several days. Visitors yesterday included a number from Terra Alta, Wheeling, West Va., and other points, while the days preceding witnessed the presence of persons from Keyser, Grafton and other points, including several from Garrett county towns. In Camp Gleam (the girls' department of the school) there are thirty-nine registered as students. This number is considerably augmented by Oakland and Mountain Lake Park girls who attend the day and evening classes.

The institute opened Saturday evening with a mass meeting and song service led by Mrs. E. W. Yates, of Cumberland, and the presentation of the members of the faculty.

Sunday evening there was a processional, directed by Mrs. Paul B. Naylor; and an address by Dr. B. C. Ishwardas, of Punjab, India.

Monday morning the real work of the institute begun with the formation and instruction of classes, the Bible study hour being under the direction of Dr. Ward, who had this class each succeeding morning. Miss Gilbert has the home study book at specified hours each morning. An American Indian playlet, with the characters in costume representing the first Americans so true to life that it was hard to recognize any of them, and directed by Mrs. Naylor, was presented during the closing hour of Monday morning. In the afternoon of each day Mrs. W. W. Grant, Oakland, has charge of the storytelling hour and her work has drawn the attention of critics so that her services at other gatherings have been in demand. Miss Hollister has charge of the foreign study book each afternoon and Mrs. F. I. Johnson is the forum leader.

Monday night there was community singing, led by Miss Huff and the address to the audience was made by Judge John Barton Payne, National Executive Chairman of the American Red Cross. His address was upon the work of the society at home and in foreign lands, the methods used by it to relieve distress and a brief history of its achievements.

Yesterday morning another playlet, directed by Mrs. Naylor, entitled China, was presented, again in costume. while the address last night was made by Mrs. F. I. Johnson, a militant dry, on the Eighteenth Amendment.

This evening Miss Gilbert will speak on the American Indian, and Dr. Ishwardas, himself an East Indian, will present India.

The school will close Friday evening when a pageant, "The Moon for Planting Comes," to be under the direction of Mrs. Naylor, will be presented.

The school this year, notwithstanding conditions, has been well attended and has given those at its head encouragement to carry on.

Sports Program Will Fill Entire Day With Musical Water Pageant in the Evening

GRANGES TO HOLD PICNIC

The date for the Deep Creek Lake Sports Day and Evening Water pageant is set for Saturday, August 20, at Deep Creek Lake, route 37, nine miles north of Oakland.

COUNCIL NOT TO ACT TO END ALL-NIGHT PARKING

Committee Makes Request at Monthly Session— Asks for Bids

A request of a committee for the Mayor and Town Council of Oakland to pass an ordinance prohibiting the parking of cars along the streets after certain hours, was voted down by the members of the council at the regular monthly meeting on Monday evening.

It was stated that this ordinance would be an inconvenience to tourists and visitors, who might decide not to return here again, and that it was unnecessary.

To Ask for Bids

Bids are being asked for the construction of a concrete or brick walk on Third street from Alder to the City hall, to conform to the remainder of the walk. Bids are to be received until August 15, when a special meeting of the council has been called.

Bids will also be asked soon for the removal of the stable and shed on the Waingold property on Liberty street. This property recently came into the possession of the town, as the time limit for redemption of the lot which was sold at tax sale had expired.

The question of amiesiting Fourth street between Oak and Alder streets was discussed as some length, but the proposition was tabled until August 15. It was pointed out that it would take approximately $1,000 to purchase the amiesite, and the other costs of grading, labor and other material used would make the total cost almost prohibitive at this time.

The council decided to continue with the 250-Watt street lamp on the corner of Second and Alder streets, for another month to determine whether or not the people desire all the 400-Watt lamps reduced to that size.

The monthly bills amounting to $740 were ordered paid.

COMMITTEES NAMED FOR LABOR DAY CELEBRATION

Thirteenth Annual Picnic To Be Held in Helbig's Grove

Special committees who will serve in various capacities for the thirteenth annual Labor Day picnic, to be held under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias lodge, on Monday, September 5, were named at a meeting of the executive committee last Friday evening following the regular lodge session.

They are as follows: speaking committee, Walter W. Dawson, Grover C. Stemple, and Lawrence M. Fraley; parade, A. R. Martin, Guy O. Yutzy, and Emroy Bolden; purchasing, David W. Walter, Alva Gornter and G. J. Altstetter; advertising, Lee R. Mason, Harry Stemple and Playford Ramsey; grounds, David W. Walter, George Fulk and Albert Kahl. J. J. Ashby, Jr., was named secretary and treasurer.

Weaver Park attractions, of Pittsburgh, Pa., will come to Oakland for that week with a Ferris wheel, merry-go-round, and concessions. The celebration is to be held in Helbig's grove, along the State road at the north edge of town, as in former years. The officers of the lodge compose the executive committee.

HOG CHOLERA OUTBREAKS THOUGHT TO BE CHECKED

Two Discovered Tuesday on Premises of R. Glass, Oakland, and B. W. Harvey, Mt. Lake

FIRST OUTBREAK IN YEAR

Two outbreaks of hog cholera in Garrett county, discovered on the premises of Robert M. Glass, near Oakland; and B. W. Harvey, Mt. Lake Park, Tuesday morning, are already thought to have been checked by the prompt action of Mr. Harvey in notifying John H. Carter, county agent, who in turn summoned Dr. O. K. Hoffman, federal veterinarian, of Hagerstown.

The disease originated on the Glass premises due to unsterilized garbage, and was carried to the Harvey pen through the purchase of two hogs from Glass on July 23. At the first sign of his animals being sick, Mr. Harvey notified Mr. Carter and a few hours later Dr. Hoffman was in Oakland. At a demonstration Tuesday evening several parties in the vicinity of the Harvey outbreak had their hogs protected with anti-hog cholera serum. The sick animals at both places are to be killed and buried.

This is the first outbreak of hog cholera within a year, and is seldom discovered here, never more than one appearing in a year's time, but all outbreaks that have been experienced have been the result of garbage feeding, Dr. Hoffman stated.

Dr. Hoffman expects to return in two weeks to make another inspection of the two premises, and at that time will probably show moving pictures and lecture on the effects and causes of the disease.

Investigations by State authorities have shown that 86 percent of all hog cholera is due to garbage feeding, and practically all the rest is due to new stock. Feeding butchers' offal, swill, slop, containing bones, rinds, scraps of uncooked pork, or water that it has been washed in, is dangerous, Dr. Hoffman stated, and all growers of hogs are urged to take no chances.

Cars Collide Near Red House on Sunday Afternoon

What might have been a serious accident occurred on Sunday afternoon two miles west of Red House on Rout 50, when the cars belonging to S. W. Slabach, Gortner, and J. L. Stemple, of near Aurora, W. Va., side swiped, wrecking machines.

The occupants of the Stemple car were Miss Stemple, her brother and Elwood DeWitt. Miss Grace Mason, an occupant of the other machine, received injuries to her back. Mr. Slabach and sister, Mr. Mason and Albert Sisk, driver of the car, escaped with a few bruises.

Mrs. Sisk was riding with Mr. and Mrs. Hervey Wolfe, at the time of the accident and the parties were enroute to Roth's Rock. Miss Mason was taken to her home where she is resting comfortably.

Mr. Slabach's car was damaged beyond repair, and the Stemple car was damaged to the extent of about $100.

PLANE DAMAGED AS PILOT IS FORCED TO LAND HERE

More Seriously Damaged in Attempting to Take Off After Making Repairs to Craft

NOW BEING DISMANTLED

Edwin Kenneth Reese, commercial airplane pilot, of Dayton, Ohio, narrowly escaped serious injury and possible death Monday evening about 6:30 when in making a forced landing in a field just south of town his plane turned over.

The machine was a Curtiss Robin type, 185 horse power, blue Cabin monoplane and has a capacity for three passengers. There was no one with the pilot at the time of the accident.

Mr. Reese was enroute from Dayton to Baltimore. To avoid a storm he had to gain considerable altitude which consumed his gasoline supply sooner than he had anticipated.

As he circled over Oakland in an attempt to find a landing field his gasoline supply became exhausted and he made a hasty descent to the field on the outskirts of town.

In landing he drew the brakes too quickly which threw the machine completely over. The propeller was badly bent and one wing and the tail spread were torn. A new propeller was ordered and repairs made on Tuesday. The safety glass in the cabin did not shatter which probably saved the pilot from serious injury by flying glass.

The plane was damaged to a greater extent Tuesday evening when after making the necessary repairs and attempting to take off the pilot skimmed a fence and wrecked, this time damaging the propeller, the fusilage, the landing gear and the wings.

The pilot was not hurt, except for a scratch on his elbow. He estimated that the plance could be repaired for approximately $300. The repairs earlier in the day cost in the neighborhood of $50. The plane is being dismantled and will be shipped to Baltimore for repairs.

Mr. Reese stated he had been a pilot for about ten years and this was the first time he had had an accident. The plane had been in his possession for about a year and a half.

WILL USE MARYLAND COAL IN STATE'S INSTITUTIONS

Contracts Awarded for Product of Garrett County Mines

Contracts for the purchase for use in State institutions of 45,000 tons of Maryland coal at a cost of approximately $[illegible],000, most of which will go to wages of miners producing the commodity, were signed Monday by Walter N. Kirkman, head of the State Central Purchasing Bureau.

The coal is still be[illegible]ground, Mr. Kirkman said, and will come from mines at Kempton, Vindex, Kitzmiller and Crellin, in Garrett county, and Mount Savage, Lonaconing and the George's Creek region between Frostburg and Westernport, in Allegany county.

On the purchase contracts, every State owned and operated institution in Maryland will use coal from Maryland mines for the next year. Mr. Kirkman said practically all the coal was bought at the mines.

Last week, Baltimore City purchased 38,500 tons of coal from Western Maryland mines and Mayor Jackson stated at the time approximately $45,000 of the cost would go to the miners in wages.

Rotary Club to be Guests of Dr. McComas at Camp Minnetoska

Members of the Oakland Rotary club will be guests of Dr. Henry W. McComas at Camp Minnetoska, five miles west of Oakland, on Friday afternoon and evening, for the regular weekly meeting of the club. Dr. McComas was the organizer and first president of the club.

Kinsey N. Merritt, traffic agent of the Railway Express Agency at Philadelphia, was the speaker at the regular meeting last week. He spoke on the "Romance of Express Transportation," and traced the history of express from the time that a man started carrying packages to different places just to serve his friends. From this idea grew the express company of today.

Mr. Merritt has been in express service for nearly 25 years and has been devoting his time to a study of merchandising and distribution problems.

Lesson for August 7

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS—DUTIES TO GOD

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:1-11.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, with all thy soul and with all thy strength. —Deuteronomy 6:5.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Giving of the Ten Commandments.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Giving of the Ten Commandments.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Loving and Worshiping God.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Giving God First Place.

The Ten Commandments furnish us with the greatest moral code the world has ever seen. The law was not given to save sinners, nor to rule saints, but to reveal sin (Rom. 3:19, 20), and to lead to Christ (Gal. 3:24).

I. The Preface to the Decalogue (vv. 1, 2).

The Ten Commandments are based upon the truth set forth in the preface. Two great thoughts underlie this—what the Lord is, and what he did. What he is, is embodied in the name Jehovah-Elohim. The name Jehovah sets forth three great truths.

1. His all-sufficiency. All that he is and does centers in himself.

2. His sovereignty. There is no being equal to him, nor above him. He is outside of and above every being in the universe. He is immanent and transcendent.

3. His unchangeableness. The "I am that I am" (Exod. 3:14) may be expanded into "I am what I was," "I will be what I am," "Jesus Christ the same yesterday and today and forever" (Heb. 13:8). The name Elohim signifies the strong and mighty One.

II. The First Commandment (v. 3).

"Thou shalt have no other gods before me" means literally, "Thou shalt have no other gods before my face." This commandment requires single-hearted worship and service. Man was created a worshiping being. From the very deepest recesses of his being he demands a god. Furthermore, every man has his god. It is either the true God or a false god. The center around which our activities revolve is our God. This commandment may be broken—

1. By living for self. If one's activities gather around himself he worships himself, and is an idolater.

2. By making pleasure the goal of our lives, and spending our time and money for our sensual enjoyment.

3. By being covetous (Col. 3:5). Every man who is greedy for gold breaks this commandment.

III. The Second Commandment (vv. 4-6).

The first commandment is directed against false gods. The second is directed against the worship of the true God with false forms. This commandment may be broken—

1. By resorting to the use of crosses and images in our worship.

2. By putting the pope in the place of Christ, and following after priestcraft.

It should be observed that this commandment is accompanied with a warning and a promise. The warning is that iniquity will be visited upon the children even to the third and fourth generation. The most awful thing a man can do is to pass on a wrong conception of God to his children. The promise is that he will show mercy to thousands. This means that the workings of the same divine law will pass on God's mercy to thousands of generations.

IV. The Third Commandment (v. 7).

The Hebrew word translated "vain" in this prohibition against taking the name of God in vain, means lying, deceptive, unreal. Therefore, to take the name of God in vain means to use it in a lying, deceptive and unreal way. The word "guiltless" is from a Hebrew word, the root-meaning of which is to be clean, to go unpunished. God will not hold a man to be clean nor allow him to go unpunished who takes the divine name in a lying and hypocritical way. This third commandment may be broken:

1. By profanity. 2. By perjury. 3. By levity and frivolity. 4. By hypocrisy, which is professing to live for God when living for self.

V. The Fourth Commandment (vv. 8-11).

The essential principle embodied in this commandment is work and rest. It enjoins work on six days and forbids work on the seventh. The command to work six days in just as binding as the rest on the seventh. The human being needs physical rest and spiritual refreshment. This commandment may be broken—

1. By living in idleness. 2. By working on the day set apart for the worship of God. 3. By making it a day of feasting. 4. By devoting it to pleasures and games.

WORDS OF WISDOM

It was fitting that heaven should go into mourning when Christ died.—Zwemer.

* * *

A great deal of the religion of the present hour is a dead philosophy.—Philpott.

What is eternity? was asked of a deaf and dumb pupil, and the beautiful and striking answer was, "It is the lifetime of the Almighty."

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

Somebody came down to camp Monday and seeing about thirty-five scouts and me, asked if they were all my kids, or if it was just a picnic. Remembering a joke I once heard, I told him they were my kids and that it was no picnic. Cook Bill Turney reaffirmed the fact that it was no picnic as far as he was concerned either. Quick on rebuttal. That's us.

A woman of considerable dimensions is just now stooping in front of the Garrett National. She can hardly waddle and her shoe string needs tying. (Mental note: Should the well behaved young man rush down and offer his services?)

Now she is looking about furtively to see if anybody is looking. She is going to attempt it! Her first try for a bendover is a complete failure. My heavens, lady, don't try to raise your foot up to the ledge of the bank window! What would the neighbors think? Boy, that scare's over for the time being at least. Why doesn't she try the curb? She's bending over again and this time with the assistance of a little extra straining on my part via the mental telepathy route, she has fastened her fingers on both strings of the right shoe. I'm glad it's all over, lady!

What! Success has gone to her head. She's trying to tie the other one. The last strain was too much. She's all stooped over now and can't seem to stoop back up again. I'm glad there's a doctor's office handy.

Do you suppose she would believe my intentions were of the best if I suggested going there?

She has one hand on the window sill now. Let's all give an "alley oop." She's up again and after another glance everywhere but up here in The Republican window, she's on her way again.

I was all set to eat some pie and ice cream but I'm afraid of the consequences after that scene.

It's a pity somebody else couldn't come along the street now and give me another idea. If not, I guess I'll have to finish this without any.

Charley Sprague still contends that the shirt sleeve is all right for a napkin. As proof he brings in a newspaper of national fame in which it states that in the Seventeenth Century it was considered the best of manners to use your host's tablecloth for a handkerchief.

If I had been a host in those days I would have stipulated that no guests with colds in the head would be considered gentlemanly under any circumstances if they took advantage of the customs of the time.

And speaking along this line, do you know why buttons are put on coat sleeves? Really, Charlie, you ought to know. They are a relic of the days when something had to be done to keep men from using their sleeves as a handkerchief. You never see buttons on my coat sleeves. I have outgrown the habit of using it.

Do I use a handkerchief? Oh, yes, sometimes; but I usually just sniffle.

Bud Winters asked me the other day if I was Scoop, and laughed so heartily while asking that I felt flattered. The laugh sounded just like that.

"You never read that stuff much," I asked, secretly hoping that he would deny the statement immediately and maybe add a compliment or two.

"Oh, not very often," he muttered. Just imagine the shock to my vanity, doctor.

It's a wonder I'm able and willing to write this week at all.

But it was cured the next day when somebody came in and said they read every word of it every week and liked it. That makes it even again.

Yesterday they put me down at the linotype for a five-hour sitting, running 2100 slugs of the same thing. Nothing to do but just sit and watch the machine run. This morning it was a three or four-hour sit in order to finish the job. This might be all right for those in a contest, or monkeys, but I'll tell you right now that's too much sitting. It has given me a new ailment—sitter's pains. And I'm thankful right now that I'm not as skinny as Colonel Bell.

MT. LAKE PARK

Election to Be Held

The annual municipal election at Mountain Lake Park will be held on Tuesday, August 9, between the hours of 1 and 7 p. m., in the office of the Mayor and Council, next to Martin's store. There are two vacancies to be filled for Councilmen. There are only two nominees, namely, Gay Hayden and James Elliott. Notwithstanding this, however, each elector should exercise his right of franchise.

Fire Plugs Needed

We have harped on this subject so often, we are afraid much repetition will become monotonous. However, a letter received by the writer is so much in point that we venture to give it, at least in part. Referred to the article in The Republican of last week, "Water Needed to Save Homes Outside of Oakland", the author of the letter says:

"It is of great importance to the citizens and property owners of the Park to make some provision to assist the Fire department of Oakland. When the fire engines respond to a call from Mountain Lake Park all that can be done is to use the 250 gallons of water each engine carries. If that extinguishes the blaze, good and well. If not, then all that can be done is to stand by and watch the building burn.

"Oakland can well be proud of her Fire department and it has always responded willingly and promptly to our calls.

"Under many streets of the Park run four-inch water lines and these can be tapped and fire plugs installed at small expense, and six of these plugs can be placed at a total cost of not more than $250. This would result in a lowered insurance rate, more incentive to build homes and in addition the Fire Department would be assurred that we were doing our part to assist it in its volunteer work.

"While the funds of the town are limited, we feel that if there is any way possible for the authorities to install two or three plugs this summer, the same should be done."

Extension Workers Doing Good Work

We presume it is just human nature to be impatient of results, and to desire immediate returns for our efforts. But it is an old saying (modified to suit the occasion) "all things come to him who waits"—if he hustles while he waits. This, it appears to us, applies in a large measure to the efforts now being made to put the future of the Park on a solid and permanent basis. We must bear in mind that Rome was not built in a day. First the seed and then the harvest.

Those of us who may feel some disappointment because large delegations and conferencea have not been brought to the Park frequently thia summer, must realize that those in charge of the development of the extension idea have worked under unusual adverse conditions, and the wonder is that they have attained any measure of success at all. But even under these conditions larger crowds of people have attended the special day programs this year than for a number of years. We are confident of final results that will satisfy the most exacting.

On Monday while Prof. F. B. Cox, superintendent of the Monongalia county (W. Va.) public schools, and J. A. Enlow were scouting the Park for geological specimens, they found on the William White farm, a short distance south of the Park, what is believed to be a fragment of a meteor. This specimen was evidently plowed up some years ago and cast on a pile of rocks in a ravine, where it was found. It has been taken to Morgantown by Mr. Cox, who will determine its content and origin.

It may be of interest to note that generally, about August 10th of each year, a number of meteors may be seen, named Perseids, as they originate from the constellation of Perseus. Meteorites, the so-called "shooting stars" are frequently seen, which as a rule are entirely consumed by the intense heat generated by friction when passing through the atmosphere, but occasionally one will reach the earth's surface, and in composition is found to consist of elements well-known to us, iron and nickel being common. We will await the report of Prof. Cox.

License Fees

The payment of a fee for the privilege of conducting a business within an incorporated town, is almost generally accepted as an equitable and proper method of supplementing other revenues necessary, amongg other things, in keeping the streets and roadways in repair. When a license fee is charged against those out-of-town peddlers for the privilege of making a house to house canvass for the purpose of selling articles of merchandise, or for any other more or less temporary or seasonable business, we can see no possible objection to its collection. This is only justice to the regular tax-paying merchants of the town. And the fees provided here are not high, in fact in many respects are much lower than in other towns. For instance in Fairmont, W. Va., a fee of $250 is provided for the selling of bread by out-of-town bakers, from door to door.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

The statement of Senator Borah advocating a revision of the European debts under certain conditions, has had the effect of reviving the debate on this all-important question. It is apparently the opinion of the Idaho Senator that such revision ought only be agreed to if it can show that the American people would benefit thru increased world trade and prosperity in a degree sufficient to justify the scaling down of the European war debts. That such a qualifying condition for reviewing the debts is a commendable one, goes without saying. But that it will be difficult to convince the American people and the members of the United States Senate in advance that such a scaling down of debts would result in a gain rather than an added burden, also goes without saying.

The contentions of the internationalists that debt cancellation will restore prosperity and usher up into another golden era have to be taken with several ounces of salt. They point to the virtual cancellation of German reparations, by the allied governments, and assume that we ought to do the same thing about debts. But the cases are by no means parallel. In the first place reparations were exacted from a fallen enemy by a victorious foe, and they are only being cancelled because the allied governments realize the futility of trying to collect anything more from prostrate Germany. But the money loaned by America to the allies was a regular loan made in good faith. It was a friendly transaction, and it was not executed under duress, not even under the duress of war, because practically all of the unpaid part of the debt represents money loaned after the armistice was signed.

And while Germany is being forgiven reparations solely because she can pay no more, there is no evidence that the allies cannot continue to pay installments on their debts to Uncle Sam, without greatly injuring their economic fabric. They are still spending enormous sums in preparation for the next war, and the condition of the two greatest nations which owe us money is by no means desperate. Great Britain is gradually getting her financial house in order and France, with the greatest per capita gold reserve in the world has been touched comparatively lightly by the depression. In fact, based on capacity to pay, France is better able to pay now than she was when the debt settlement was made a few years ago.

There is no question that Europe does not want to pay on the war debts any longer, and perhaps she will not continue to pay many years longer. But this does not mean that Uncle Sam should cancel the debt. To do so would be only having to go through the stigma of repudiation. Such a situation would put Europe in much better position to borrow from us when the next war comes along. But if the debts are repudiated, not forgiven, the warring nations may have a little more difficulty getting money from Uncle Sam the next time they engage in their more or less popular sport of making war.

When Europe is spending so much for war preparation there is little ground for saying that she is staggering under the burden of debt payments to Uncle Sam. And there is little reason to believe that a cancellation of the debts would greatly change the world economic situation except to add additional burdens on to the backs of American taxpayers. It is quite conceivable that the money which the European nations saved on dept payments would be diverted to battleships, regimental and other supplies. This would benefit nobody but the munitions makers, and certainly we do not want to heap more taxes on the average American for any such purpose.

After all Europe's troubles at the bottom are political rather than economic. What the dark and bloody continent is suffering from most is Polish corridors, Bessarabias, Macedonias, and other political disputes too numerous to mention. If these questions could be gotten rid of, together with the accompanying tariff barriers Europe's economic troubles would be on a fair way to solution. But, it will be answered, they cannot be eliminated. Well, if this is true, the economic situation certainly cannot be cured by such half way measures as debt "cancellation" and opening the American markets to the cheap labor of Europe and the Orient.

New Loves

By H. IRVING KING

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(WNU Service)

MISS SELINA BRIGGS lived on Cape Cod. To be precise in Sandport. The house she lived in was the real thing in early Colonial architecture—it had a "lean-to." The family was small, consisting only of herself and her orphaned niece, Henrietta. Miss Selina had squandered her savings in giving Etta an education, even sending her through Wellesley.

And now Henrietta was twenty-two, proficient in all accomplishments but conversant with no calling that would bring in money. She laid a thousand plans for becoming a wage-earner, but her aunt "put her foot down" on every one of them. Etta fretted—but what could she do? She would not forsake Selina, even if she could get employment somewhere else—which was extremely doubtful.

"I wonder if I shall ever be married," thought Etta.

That summer there returned to his boyhood home Frank P. Ellsworth, a millionaire from New York. Frank P. had not been seen in Sandport for forty years until he had suddenly appeared there, bought the old Elijah Crandal place, and began the erection of a great stone mansion. He had been twenty-five when he had gone away and, by consequence, was sixty-five now.

There were plenty of people who remembered him as the tall, thin, scraggy young man, full of ambition and a hard worker, whose parents were among the town's poor and shiftless. But not one of them would have recognized in the large, portly, prosperous-looking, autocratic and reserved plutocrat, the Frank Ellsworth of long ago.

Every man and women in the place, it seemed, who was old enough to make out a colorful case, greeted Frank P. like a long lost brother and intimated that they had been his earliest friend and benefactor. But the gentleman from New York was not an easy person to "get next to."

"I wonder if he will go and see Miss Selina?" the older people whispered to each other. For between Frank Ellsworth, the poor, struggling and low-born youth, and Selina Briggs, the pretty daughter of one of the proudest of the "old families," there had been, it was rumored at the time, a little love affair—which, of course, came to nothing on account of the vast difference in the social status of the lovers. Some said that was why Frand had suddenly left Sandport.

Be that as it may, the golden, returned wanderer did not call upon Miss Selina and Miss Selina appeared to be only languidly interested in his return. By the following summer the new house was completed and was occupied by the millionaire and his family. The only son, Egbert, was only twenty-five, just the age his father had been at the time of his flitting from Sandport. By the time fall was beginning to draw to its end and the summer folks were departing, Egbert and Etta were fully aware that they loved each other—and so was the rest of the community.

It was the second Sunday after he had taken possession of his new house that Frank Ellsworth, coming out of church with his wife and son, ran plump into Miss Selina coming out with Etta, and for the first time for forty years lifted his hat and spoke to his boyhood "flame." Introductions naturally followed—and that's how Egbert and Etta became first acquainted. As for Selina and Frank after that when they met they spoke of course—generally about the weather—but that is all they saw of each other. Not so Egbert and Etta—they were together with an increasing frequency from their first meeting on.

Miss Selina watched the growing intimacy between her niece and young Ellsworth approvingly. Frank watched it disapprovingly. Mrs. Ellsworth, being a model wife—old style model—was prepared to think just as her husband thought. Egbert saw matters drawing to a crisis, felt the coming storm and talked it over with Etta, who talked it over with her aunt who said: "If you two want to be married why don't you do so? You are both old enough to know your own minds if you are ever going to. But what shall I do when you are gone?"

"Oh, we shan't go away, auntie," replied Etta. "Egbert likes Sandport. He wants to fix up the old house and live here."

"All right," said Miss Selina.

Egbert told his father in a most offhand manner what had been decided upon. The old man made his fortune by his quick decisions. He looked at Egbert, saw that square-set jaw, and knew that in this he could not move him. "Very well," said he. "Family not good enough for me once!" and then, grimly, "It will be a bit of revenge for me, anyhow." For a full hour after Egbert had left him Frank sat there musing.

Possibly Selina mused too. But if they mused of what might have been neither Frank nor Selina ever spoke. What was lurking in their minds as they watched the happiness of Egbert and Etta no one ever knew.

Overworking Children

"What's the matter with little brother?"

"Brain fag. He's trying to think up a bright saying that will win a prize when mother sends it to a magazine."

WHICH WOULD YOU RATHER BE, SICK OR IN HEALTH?

It Is Up To Each Individual in Large Measure to Decide

"How do you regard your doctor? As a repair man to be called only in an emergency? Or, as a service station, to be visited at regular intervals so that breakdowns may be avoided and the human machine may be kept in first class condition?"

Dr. R. H. Riley, director of the Maryland State Department of Health, asks these questions, with their emphasis on the personal pronoun, after speaking of a resolution adopted recently by the doctors in Carroll county in which they tell the people of that county that it is within their own power to prevent much of the sickness that occurs among old and young and from all classes of diseases. Accordingly, the doctors urge immunization against typhoid fever, diphtheria and smallpox, and advise a general medical examination at least once a year so that conditions that need correction may be detected and cared for properly, and while there is a possibility of a favorable outcome.

A copy of the resolution, which was adopted by the Carroll County Medical Society, July 14, 1932, was duly forwarded to the State Board of Health. Here it is:

"The old concept of the physician's function has been that he is a repair man, to be consulted when sickness occurs. The modern concept held by enlightened people regards the doctor also as a service station, who if regularly consulted, can prevent a great deal of sickness which would otherwise occur.

"There is now no reason why any person should have typhoid fever, smallpox, diphtheria or lockjaw and such diseases as tuberculosis, cancer, diabetes, heart disease and high blood pressure are all recognizable in their early stages and if recognized can very often be arrested or cured and the victim continue to live usefully and comfortably.

"Therefore, the physicians of Carroll county advise all persons to have their children protected against typhoid fever, diphtheria, smallpox and lockjaw, and in addition to this every one is advised to be examined once each year for the purpose of detecting such slowly developing conditions as tuberculosis, cancer, diabetes, Bright's disease, high blood pressure, heart disease, etc., if existent, in their incipiency, when much can be done for their relief and cure. The general adoption of this policy by the public will effect a marked diminution in the amount of sickness and will greatly reduce the anxiety and expense that are the inevitable results of sickness when it does occur."

The State Board of Health, at its regular monthly meeting, held July 21, adopted the following resolution in acknowledgment of the action of the Carroll County Medical Society:

"The State Board of Health at its regular meeting, July 21, 1932, received the resolution of the Carroll County Medical Society in regard to its proposed program of preventive medicine in this county. The Board desires to go on record as approving this program which it believes will improve the character of public health work and to congratulate the Carroll County Medical Society for the advanced position it has taken in the general program of preventive medicine in this county."

TIME TO END IT.

(New York Times)

What had long been feared has now come to pass in Washington. The "Bonus Army," after weeks of defying decency, has broken out into violent defiance of the law and the public authorities. Its settling down at the capital was from the first a scandal. Today it has become a national reproach in the streets of Washington by the veterans so inflamed and bloody that the police could not keep order, the President could do no other than call upon the army to take the situation in hand. Mr. Hoover's statement of his reasons for this action is convincing. As he says, some of the veterans have resorted to "violence which no government can tolerate." The misguided men have refused to listen to persuasion. Now they must submit to compulsion.

Till the present the authorities have been most patient, tolerent and even sympathetic in their treatment of the encamped and militant veterans. When efforts to induce bonus seekers to go home failed, Congress passed a bill, which the President signed, to loan them the money to return where they came from. But this led to only a partial exit. Several thousand men declared that they were resolved to stay in Washington or its environs until the Government either acceded to their demands or removed them by military force: Reluctance of the Administration to make use of the latter was obvious. President Hoover has shown great forbearance. But in the crisis something decisive had to be done, if we were to be relieved of what most Americans were coming to feel to be a national disgrace.

Attorney General Mitchell has stated what the law is, and what the remedies are, in the matter of occupation of Government property by the veterans. They have not a particle of right to it. Their title to be let alone while upon it is no better than that of ordinary trespassers. The Attorney General points out that the veterans can claim no exemption from the equal operation of the laws and ordinances in the District of Columbia as affects vagabondage and public begging and violations of the Sanitary Code. Unless the authorities were prepared to submit to the humiliation of open defiance, they had to proceed to the execution of the orders of eviction from Government property.

Since this move, however cautiously and temperately made, led to a violent outbreak, almost amounting to insurrection, there was but one thing to do. Those set for upholding the law and maintaining the sovereignty of the government had to act quickly and resolutely. We are confident that the decision of the President will be sustained by the great majority of our citizens. They have for months been made uneasy and ashamed by the unprecedented and disturbing spectacle at Washington. A group has been attempting to overawe Congress and intimidate the Administration. Now that the latent spirit of insolent lawlessness has manifested itself in overt acts, the country should demand that the whole affair be thoroughly cleaned up, the veterans dispersed as speedily as may be and Americans be no longer called upon to witness an insubordinate body of men asserting at the national capital that they are above the people as a whole and more powerful than the Government itself.

COAL FROM MARYLAND MINES

If all Maryland cities and towns and all managers of public institutions in the State would imitate the City of Baltimore in patronizing the coal mines of Western Maryland, they would make a big dent in the existing unemployment evil, according to an estimate quoted by Mayor Jackson, of Baltimore.

Baltimore has just made contracts with our mines for fuel and the result will be the distribution of $45,000 in wages among the mine workers of the State. These contracts form a very small portion of the possible home consumption of Maryland coal as estimated on a survey made by the Maryland Development Bureau, a unit of the Baltimore Association of Commerce.

A consumption of 1,151,000 tons of Maryland bituminous coal is the estimated possibility for the third quarter of the year, if the full program is carried out. On a five-day week basis, this would, it is stated, mean employment for 5,073 men, and would furnish support to 25,365 members of miners' families, distributing $1,727,619 in wages. It would also swell the payrolls of the railroads to the extent of $1,256,785.

The effect of such a sum, put in circulation would be very perceptibly felt by business of many kinds

MARYLAND IDEAL FOR VACATIONISTS

Game Warden LeCompte knows his Maryland, and when he tells vacationisst that the home State possesses a greater variety of scenery than any other State in the Union, he is speaking with authority.

Maryland has twenty-three counties, and Mr. LeCompte declares that the scenery changes with every county. There is no excuse for quitting a State with twenty-three varieties of scenery for another when one is on recreation bent.

From the rock-ribbed hills of Garrett and Allegany to the sandy shores of Worcester the country is like a moving picture. The rugged surface of the far western counties well into the lovely vallegs of the Blue Ridges and then into the rolling hills of Carroll and Baltimore counties. Southern Maryland is a region not only of beauty, but of beauty gilded with romance and charming traditions and the Eastern Shore with its broad rivers and colonial mansions has won the admiration of hundreds of wealthy northerners who there find attractions which their own drab native soil cannot rival.

Why should any Marylander seek respite from care and toil in any other State when such a country as his own is available?

NO TIME TO QUIT

E. F. "Daddy" Allen is authority for the statement that fifty per cent of the crippled children would not be crippled had they been given early treatment or had proper precautions been taken. Men and women who have been enthusiastically close to the crippled children movement doubtless have long known this, but it is, nevertheless, a fact which should be emphasized and re-emphasized during the coming months.

When the economic center of gravity drops, children suffer. Then comes an immediate increase in the insidious conditions which cripple boys and girls and prevent prompt corrective or curative measures. The situation is always complicated by the understandable tendency of altruistic-minded folk to lessen their philanthropies. At such a time as the present, therefore, service clubs and other groups committed to crippled-children welfare should re-dedicate themselves to the cause and press the work with renewed determination.

In every community are men and women who would, even in these times, be willing to help, if not with money, then by contributing in goods or services. Perhaps the assistance will come in form of sewing or knitting garments. Perhaps it will be automobile rides to shaded woods for these unfortunate boys and girls. Or, it may be nothing more than a cheering visit to the hospital bedside. But whatever it is, thesignificant point is that it be done. A great need exists—now!

COUNT YOUR CHANGE

There's no argument in this editorial. It's merely a collection of facts, incontrovertible, eloquent facts that confound those who profess to see America slipping down into a state of effortless despair.

Total bank savings today exceed $29,000,000,000, equal to more than $1,000 for every family in the land. Savings depositors number 52,000,000, nearly two per family.

The number of Americans owning stock has increased almost 40 per cent since 1929.

A group of 102 companies which had 5,539,036 stockholders at the end of the boom year had 7,675,143 stockholders at the beginning of this year.

One company alone today has over 665,000 stockholders, a gain of more than 195,000 since the boom. This company has assets exceeding $3,200,000,000.

Our total stock of gold is $4,000,000,000. No other country ever possessed so much. Great Britain, for example, has only $588,000,000. Currency in circulation aggregates $5,464,000,000, or $700,000,000 more than in the boom.

Last year $16,500,000,000 worth of new life insurance was written.

Total insurance now carried is estimated at $109,000,000,000, or not far short of $1,000 for every man, woman and child in the United States. Policies in force today total 127,800,000.

Such safeguard . . is enjoyed by the people of no other nation in the world.

Our total national wealth, estimated at $329,700,000,000, is greater than that of a dozen Continental European countries combined.

The income of the American people comfortably exceeds $1,000,000,000 a week.

The per capita income here is far greater than in any other land.

There are still six or seven persons gainfully employed for every person idle.

No fewer than 25,800,000 automobiles are owned by Americans. . . This total is almost three times the number owned by all the rest of the world.

Americans possess far more telephones (19,500,000) than all other countries. . . Radios . . multiply . . over 16,545,000 . . unapproached by any other people.

How many new domestic mechanical refrigerators have been bought, would you guess? A grand total of fully 3,750,000, at an estimated expenditure approaching $2,000,000,000. In no other part of the globe do half as many homes enjoy such a luxury—Americans are rapidly coming to regard it as a necessity.

A recent survey of 29 typical small towns revealed that 71 per cent of the inhabitants owned homes, that 88 per cent had electric light, 72 per cent had baths, 51 per cent had electric washers, 55 per cent had radios, 41 per cent had vacuum cleaners.

There are more families in America than in any other land that can afford to and do send their children to high school and college. In no other land do so many average families have the meanas to enjoy foreign travel. . .

The movie still attracts a weekly average attendance of 75,000,000.

The percentage of our agricultural population who, despite inflation, are acquiring domestic comforts, conveniences, labor-saving devices, improved machinery, the use of better roads, is constantly increasing.

Today more than 700,000 farms are electrified, representing an increase of 400 per cent in eight years, and the total is being swelled rapidly.

In industrial communities hard manual toil is being steadily abolished by the introduction of machinery. Each American worker now has at his command five horsepower, a record not even remotely approached outside our boundaries.

The average working-day a generation ago was ten to twelve hours. The standard in this generation is 8 hours. . . The work-week used to consist of six days. Now it is five and one-half days, with a five-day week coming into vogue.

Never in the past was America so well equipped as it is today to resume an ephocal forward march. Not only have we changed from a debtor nanation to the greatest creditor nation on earth, not only have we vaster wealth, not only have we an unprecedented supply of gold, but we are richer in experience, richer in inventive brains, richer in scientific knowledge, richer in machinery, richer in productive facilities, richer in managerial skill, richer in discovered mineral and oil resources, richer in transportation facilities; . . . richer in every material wealth-creating product and process, richer in craftsmanship, richer in everything. . .

The country is all right. What we need is less hysteria and more confidence and courage.—Collier's, The National Weekly.

IN DAYS OF OLD

FORTY YEARS AGO

With the introduction into Oakland of electric lighting service, many public places and residences were being equipped with the necessary fixtures to illuminate the buildings, among them being Col. Sturgiss' drug store, in which chandeliers were installed during the week.

Oak Hall, the new hotel recently built and equipped by Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Hinebaugh on the Mountain Lake Road, was crowded with guests.

A meeting of the members of the Lutheran church of Oakland was called for Sunday morning following the morning sermon. At this time Rev. O. C. Miller, a former pastor, was to arbitrate the change of location for the proposed new Lutheran church, agreement among the members as to the location being impossibe.

A young man named Ohr, from Cumberland, made the trip on a bicycle from Oakland to Cumberland in less than six hours, the route being via Keyser's Ridge over the National Road.

Many persons in Oakland were improving the properties by having additions built, by painting or building new residences.

Work on a new Catholic church at Grantsville was begun.

A Cleveland and Stevenson club was organized in Oakland with the following officers in charge temporarily: R. T. Browning, chairman; James D. Hamily, secretary. A committee on permanent organization was appointed and was composed of G. S. Hamill, E. H. Bartlett, Fred. Fowler, John W. Hart and Thomas J. Peddicord.

Samuel Lawton, County Treasurer, started on a tour of the county for the purpose of collecting taxes during the week.

TWENTY YEARS AGO

On July 24, at 1:40 o'clock in the afternoon a tornado from the southwest struck Oakland. The wind, accompanied by a heavy downpour of rain, and without a moment's notice, stripped trees of their limbs, in many cases uprooting them, tearing down and moving a number of buildings within the town limits. The third story of the Naylor building on Liberty street, with the roof were carried away. Weber's greenhouses suffered severely and several residences near the old court house and in the east end of town were moved from their foundations. The rain caused a repetition of the flood of a few weeks previous when the Garret National Bank was flooded to a depth of four feet as well as other business places on Second street were more or less damaged by the high water. At Fricndsville there was disaster as a result of the overflowing of Bear Creek.

F. E. Rathbun took formal charge of his office on August 1 as County Superintendent of Schools.

Former Sheriff E. J. Frantz and his daughter, Mrs. John J. Sweeney, were painfully injured in an automobile accident which occurred about one-half mile north of town.

The Boy Scouts of Oakland attended the lecture setting forth the object of the organization given at the Park Monday evening. Prof. C. Edward Bender was the organizer of this troop, which was short lived.

A little son of Delph Brandt, 8 years old, whose home was on Meadow Mountain, was bitten on the leg by a large rattlesnake. Dr. McComas treated the lad, who was reported as recovering.

Lutherans at Grantsville were preparing to erect a new church at a cost of about $6,000.

REGIONAL CONVENTION IS ARRANGED BY PITTSBURGH

To Continue Relations Formed During Tour of Tableland

Following its enthusiastic tour of the Allegheny Tableland in June, the Allegheny Tableland Council of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce conferred with leading business men throughout the Tableland with the idea of arranging for a regional convention at some central point for the purpose of cementing friendly relationships and developing plans for future activities.

It was decided that such a convention would be held at Mountain Lake Park on August 26 and 27.

The first business session will be held at two o'clock on Friday, August 26, after which meetings will be held at short intervals until late Saturday afternoon. There will be group meetings for those interested in various phases of agriculture, and for those interested in maple syrup, buckwheat, etc., with prominent speakers presiding in each group. This will enable people of common interests to discuss their problems with those who may be of help to them, or to whom they can offer suggestions of value.

There also will be mass meetings with prominent speakers, group singing, and get-acquainted periods.

The Pittsburgh group plans to send a delegation exceeding in number the party which toured the Tableland in June; and every community in the Tableland, whether or not it has already been approached on the subject, is urged to send business men, agriculturists and professional people to this Regional Convention, which is a movement unique in rural-urban activities.

Inquiries relative to the convention may be addressed to the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce.

Five mine pickets at the R. J. Ross mine near Bloomington, were arrested on charges of alleged assault and battery last Saturday morning and the hearing which was to have been held before Justice W. A. Gonder yesterday afternoon has been postponed until Monday.

Those under arrest are John Watson, Howard Kerns, Frank Kenney, Stanley Douglas and Frank Stephens, and all are out on bond except Watson. They are charged with assaulting James Hershberger, Henry Baker and J. B. Sharpless because they desired to continue working at the mine.

A slight wage cut in order to enable the mine to furnish coal for the Luke paper mill is said to have caused the strike of most of the regular workers and it is said they had formed a picket line near the mine.

None of the three appeared at the hearing scheduled yesterday afternoon, the reason for their non-appearance being unexplained.

A Romance Lost, But Won

(WNU Service)

JOE COOK had always been one of these "good boys," held up as paragons of virtue by the mothers of neighborhood sons. Not that he was in any sense the "model boy" despised by youth. He played baseball with his street and school team, took part in normal, if not outstanding fashion, in the usual activities of the fellows of his station, and did nothing to jeopardize his position among the boys by being other than just one of them.

On the other hand, it was temperamental with Joe to enjoy the household chores from which the average boy shied. He took to responsibility as naturally as a duck takes to water, so that when his father died, leaving him saddled, at fifteen, with the responsibility of an ailing mother and two younger sisters, the tasks that fell suddenly and heavily to Joe were by no means as appalling as they might have been to another type of youth.

Before he was eighteen, Joe had not only managed to buy up a newspaper route of his own, but was already venturing in the small enterprise of a stationer and tobacconist shop and practically carrying on the household alone.

It is doubtful if Joe gave any too much thought to the predicament of being caught so young in the vise of responsibility. He ran his business and he practically ran the little household, with neither time, nor thought, for the pressure under which he lived. The activities of the women folk of his little menage interested him. Often he did the marketing on his way home from work, built in shelves or did carpentry work of various sorts after hours, was interested in his sister's problems of clothes and beaux, tended his mother in her illnesses and withal was a normal healthy young fellow of whom, as the neighbors said, any mother might well be proud.

And Joe's mother was. She worshiped the ground upon which he walked, adored his goodness and was never tired of relating to whomsoever would listen the virtues of this son. His sisters too were aware that Joe was a brother to cherish. He was not like the other girls' brothers, rude, uncouth, uninterested.

All well and good during the early years of Joe's twenties, but on he marched into his thirties and still the same conditions prevailed. He was a youth submerged by family. Both the girls, meanwhile, had married, but not what is known in the worldly sense of the word as successfully. Beulah's husband seemed to have no facility at holding down a position for more than a few months at a time and then, after long periods of idleness, would pick up another at which he was fairly sure to have no better success.

Teena had married a young man in the apartment house where they lived, who held a lucrative position, at the time, as draftsman, but who had developed, since marriage, weak lungs which imperiled his future. These conditions, what with the sisters and their husbands living at home, and the mother's health still precarious, kept Joe close to his treadmill.

Then, too, within three years of these marriages, there were babies in the household. At the end of the first six years, four tots were making greedy, adoring demands on their Uncle Joe. With what sporadic aid his sisters could give him by dressmaking and work in the home, and the all too occasional contributions of his brothers-in-law, Joe was practically supporting ten people the greater part of the time.

At forty, a time of life when a man has a right to feel that his roots have gone down into the home and family he has created for himself, Joe was precisely where he had been at twenty, except that his business had grown and with it, his home responsibilities. His mother, blessing him, died meanwhile, but there were half grown nieces and nephews now. Teena's husband was about to die of an advanced case of tuberculosis, and Beulah's problem of her husband's repeated unemployment remained precisely what it had been since the day she married, to say nothing of a growing incompatibility between them which made each day precarious.

And at forty, for the first time in the years, Joe began to feel restless, secretly to feel the pangs of frustration, denial, and lack of adventure which characterized his life. His nieces and nephews growing up about him, seemed to awaken within him a sense of defeat. These children, with their lives ahead of them, must be spared the sterile klud of years that, without his realizing it, had descended upon him. Life was something wide, alluring and compensating—out there! Out there, away from the wheel of routine upon which he had been turning since the day he was born.

From the awakening of that realization on, life became to Joe largely a matter of "out there." Out there—worlds to be seen, gay glamorous people to be met, ships upon which to sail. . . .

The idea of Europe set in. Every day when you picked up the papers, there were the lists of sailings. Berengaria. Olympic. Ile de France. Across the Atlantic! Out into the Mediterranean! For six years, Joe carried around that carking dream in his heart, and incredibly, there did come the time when it looked as if he were going. There were two widows in the household now, Teena, by death, and Beulah, who had obtained a divorce from a man who had proved himself worthless. The lovely children were grown. Beulah's eldest, Frank, was by now the pride and delight of Joe's heart.

At nineteen, he was already the life and force of his uncle's stationer's shop which had been enlarged to more than four times its original size, to say nothing of a printing business on the side.

It was natural, once Joe had expressed his secret desire for the trip to Europe, that the entire family should concentrate on making this possible, and there actually came the day, with his prize nephew having demonstrated his ability to run the business, and the sum of six hundred dollars in hand for the six weeks' tour, when Joe presented himself at the steamship office to purchase his ticket for Europe.

There was not much about the bland, bald, stoutish little middle-aged man to indicate the tornado of excitement within him.

From the minute he set foot in the steamship office, however, adventure, so long deferred, began to take place for Joe. Incredibly, not only was the blond bundle of perfume and furs and beauty standing beside him at the counter purchasing a ticket for his very same boat, but she spoke! She spoke, and thus was an acquaintance struck up, and a pleasant, if casual pledge given for the hope of future meeting on the boat.

For the first time in his life Joe was smitten; more than smitten, he walked out of that office stricken with love. It was not so much what she had said; just enough to indicate to him the one thing about her blessed unattachment that he needed to know, but she had expressed the desire to know more of him!

Visions awoke in him of nights on board a ship, every precious moment of them ripening his acquaintance with a goddess—his love for a goddess!

It was not uncharacteristic of the kind of handwriting in which Joe's destiny seemed to be written that two days before sailing, his shop, with its printing business upstairs, should burn to the ground, not one-third covered by insurance.

It all happened so quickly, the shock, the calamity, the subsequent days of trial and loss, that the great ship that carried away his adventure was almost at destination before his calamity hit him with full force.

The fire, the crippling of his finances, the draining of his resources, the struggle about to begin again, were as naught compared to the death of the romance that had sailed with that ship. For one brief moment, golden beauty, the soft eyes of an incomparable woman, the lure of more beauties about to be bestowed, had flashed upon the timid eyes of Joe and just as quickly been snatched away, leaving him stricken with doused dreams and thwarted romance.

It was just as well that a few days later an edition of his evening newspaper, which happened to escape his eye, bore the portrait of a large blond woman which would have brought him immediate recognition.

"Female Card Shark Fleeces Business Men en route to France. Is met at Cherbourg by detectives."

No, Joe Cook did not see the photograph or the article. He is ten years older now, a great uncle, and the business is once more beginning to get on its feet.

In a way, the routine is paralyzing, but somehow, now, Joe is a man with a past. He has had his romance. He cherishes it. He mourns it and is richly sad.

Goldfish Feel Lonely

If you place a mirror in a tank which contains just one fish you have probably come to the conclusion that the creature is exceedingly vain, for it seems to spend a great deal of its time admiring its own reflection. But Mr. Goldfish is not admiring himself. What he really wants to do is to go for a swim with the fellow he sees in the looking glass. He is feeling lonely.

James Spooner, says London Tit-Bits, has been trying looking-glass experiments with fish of various kinds, and he finds that they are first attracted by a mirror and then shows signs of considerable annoyance. They begin by making overtures to the reflection, swimming to and fro across the glass side by side with the image. Then they try to go through the glass in order to get closer to the other fish. Finding that the other fellow won't respond, they show signs of anger, swimming rapidly up and down and making little snaps of annoyance.

Ireland's Shamrock

There is no plant known as shamrock which is peculiar to Ireland. White clover, in various sections of Ireland called "shamrock," grows abundantly in the United States. The name is most commonly given to one of the hop clovers, which are widely diffused over the island, but cannot claim to be its exclusive possession. This plant is commonly exported from Ireland to London and even to the United States for St. Patrick's day celebrations.—New York World-Telegram.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

It is a well known fact that Luther's Bible was the most potent influence in shaping the German language. England owes a similar debt to the King James version, which together with the plays of William Shakespeare and the folk lore of Mother Goose made our mother tongue.

Today we find that the Bible plays its age-long role of building the language of a people, especially when illiteracy rests like a pall upon the land.

There are large areas in the Southland where hundreds of our citizens cannot read or write. In the corridor of the Interior Department building at Washington, D. C., there is a thought-provoking chart representing the nations of the world by conventional figures, John Bull standing for England and Uncle Sam for the United States. This chart is called "The Stature of Illiteracy," and unhappily Uncle Sam is taller than any of his neighbors, and more ignorant by several percent than his nearest competitor.

President Hoover has created a commission to study this situation and recommend methods by which it can and will be remedied. To carry on this work, Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, formerly Superintendent of Education in Rowan county, Kentucky, is in Washington, as Chairman of the Commission on Illiteracy.

Back of her call to this important post is a real human interest story. While serving as superintendent of public education in Rowan county, in 1910, she inaugurated what was known as "Moonlight Schools" thruout the county. These schools were primarily for adult illiterates. These mountain people had a great desire to read the Bible, and gave that as a reason for attending the Moonlight Schools. Mrs. Stewart's faith in their expressed interest in the Bible was not very strong, but as an incentive to her students she offered to give a Bible as a prize to those who learend to read the Bible in a given time. These prize Bibles were of very attractive appearance, had the name of the student printed on the cover in gold and were of good readable type. She anticipated having to supply two or three dozen at most. However, at the end of the Moonlight School term, one thousand, one hundred and nineteen had qualified and received Bibles.

Miss Stewart tells of one evening near the end of this experiment when, being a trifle late in reaching one of the schools, she ran across the field to the little school house anxious to see what these mountaineer students were doing at the closing moments of the period. She was about to enter hastily, when as she pushed open the door, she was halted by the sight which greeted her. Within the quiet room every student was reading his Bible.

The Superintendent of Schools of Newport, Virginia, when asked to relate the most thrilling experience that had come to him as a result of the night schools for the illiterate in his territory, said: "It was when an old colored man thanked me, with tears in his eyes, for teaching him to read the Bible."

The Maryland Bible Society and the American Bible Society are fostering this blessed work. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He may send more laborers into His harvest.

Newspaper Advertising Costs LESS

LET'S BUY IT !

The more

The more

Our Readers Are Constantly Deciding To Buy Something That's Advertised In This Newspaper.

Our readers are always buying something. They never stop buying. They hold family buying conferences. They plan, they compare,they talk among themselves about buying this or that,they talk about cost, about quality and style. Buying, with our readers, never reaches a "standstill." Their wants are never completely filled.

They spend more money in a year than all of our banks take in on deposit. Their buying power is tremendous. It's the biggest factor in the community.

Their purchases consist of nearly everything under the sun, shoes, clothing, dresses, hats, groceries, fruits, jewelry, hardware, tires, automobiles, pastries, luxuries and necessities. Nothing escapes their buying.

And they are good buyers, too,—they shop around considerably—the largest market in which they do the most shopping is the advertising columns of this paper —they "shop" the advertisements in this paper from page to page—not a page, not an advertisement missing their searching eyes, time and experience has taught it's economy to "shop from the advertisements."

Experience is always a good teacher, and it has taught our readers that besides being thrifty in reading the advertisements, it is a time saver as well. They shop first in this newspaper, making a list of their wants, then, list in hand, go direct to the store, saving trouble and worry of running from one store to another hunting their wants.

They look upon the advertisements in this newspaper as a service rendered and read them as thoroughly as the news.

Mr. Merchant, you can talk to the biggest buying power in this community every week. You can talk to them in the quiet of their home, you can talk to them at a time when they are in a buying mood, when they are themselves talking it over, discussing their wants and what and where to buy. Your store can sit in on these buying conferences. They welcome you. They read every word in your advertisement about your store and your merchandise.

Invite them with an advertisement in this paper. Tell and you'll sell. The more you tell the more you'll sell.

Turnips Make Good Sauerkraut

Good sauerkraut can be made from medium-sized, purple-top turnips, the U. S. Department of Agriculture has found. The turnips used should be firm, sweet and juicy, so the fermentation and flavor will be satisfactory. The fleshy part of the root is ground or shredded and mixed with salt at the rate of four ounces of salt to ten pounds of turnips. This is then packed down in stone jars, weighted down and allowed to ferment. Turnip sauerkraut can be stored at low temperature for some time. It has a sharp flavor, closely resembling good cabbage sauerkraut.

Most of the turnip flavor is lost when the kraut ferments.

How to make old pieces of furniture more attractive and serviceable, and suggestions for improvising new pieces at small cost, are given in a publication just issued by the Extension Service of the University of Maryland. Miss Florence Mason, district home demonstration agent, is the author. Copies of this bulletin, which is No. 64, may be obtained by addressing requests to the University of Maryland at College Park.

27 PERSONS ARRESTED IN COUNTY RAIDS LAST WEEK

Prohibition Agents Visit Various Places at Friendsville During Firemen's Celebration

ALL RELEASED ON BOND

Swooping down upon the usually quiet town of Friendsville and later visiting other points in the county, Federal Investigators Wm. R. Harvey, D. H. Walker and Lean Poore and Deputy Sheriffs Clarence Spear and Samuel Cole, of Garrett county, made twenty-one arrests Friday in a series of whirlwind raids. All of the alleged offenders posted bonds in the sum of $500 and were released for the action of Garrett County grand jury in September. Six others were arrested later.

The major portion of the arrests occurred at Friendsville where a firemen's convention was in progress and for the occasion the speaks and manufacturers had ample provision on hand to supply the needs of their customers, hence the confiscation of the stocks made the town arid and detracted from business along the line of liquid refreshment quite materially.

Among those arrested and the preferred charges against them are:

Mabel J. Rumbaugh, Friendsville, speakeasy, where the officers seized 83 quarts and 31 pints of alleged beer, 6 gallons of mash, and charged the owner with manufacture and possession.

Alvin Sines, Friendsviile, unlawful possession of alleged intoxicants in his residence, but no sale.

Holmes Burkholder, Friendsville, speakeasy; 32 pints and 4 quarts of alleged beer seized. Charge, sale and possession.

Chris Sines, an ex-constable of the county, Friendsville, and his daughter, Dollie Sines, where 20 quarts of alleged beer was seized and a triple charge of sale, manufacture and possession was entered against them.

Joseph Cunningham and Amanda Gibbs, Friendsville. Here the officers seized 25 quarts of beer, one barrel of rye mash, a five-gallon still and charged the offenders with the sale, manufacture and possession of unlawful products.

Buzzard Friend, Friendsville, sale and possession; no selzure.

Mary E. Matheney, Friendsville, sale and possession; no seizure.

Arlie Matheney Friendsville, sale and possession; no seizure.

TO SHOW VALUABLE RAMS AT SALE HERE SEPT. 3RD

Garrett County Ranks Second In State In Production

Garrett county has a sheep population of about 14,000 head and ranks second in the State in lamb and wool production, according to John H. Carter, county agent. The lambs and wool produced in this county bring in around $75,000 to $100,000 annually and this money comes at a time when few other farm products are being sold, it was stated.

The nutritious grass and high altitude of this region makes an ideai combination for sheep, Mr. Carter said. "The grass-fed lambs of this section enjoy a high reputation in the Baltimore, Jersey City and Pittsburgh markets, and although they are selling low just now they are still paying as well as anything else on the farm."

A series of five purebred ram shows and sales is conducted annually to afford Maryland sheepmen an opportunity to see and to obtain the right kind of breeding rams. The fifth show and sale of the series will be held in Oakland on Saturday, September 3, and according to Mr. Carter the rams assembled for this occasion will comprise one of the best bunches ever seen together in this section.

"Flock owners are realizing that it takes good rams and plenty of feed to produce market topping lambs," Mr. Carter continued. "In times like the present, more so than when lambs are higher, the lambs from a good, thick, low-set ram will command a much higher cash price than thin, small, scrubby lambs. Scrub lambs will not only bring a very low price but it is hard to get buyers to take them at any price," he concluded.

Barn Destroyed by Fire; Incendiarism Suspected

A large barn on the farm belonging to Luther Nine, Underwood, was destroyed by fire on Monday night. It is thought that the building was set on fire by someone who evidently broke into it for the purpose of steaing something inside. In addition to the bullding, one calf was burned. The structurc was insured for $1,500.

TO INVESTIGATE RELIEF NEEDS OF COUNTY AUG. 19

Meeting Is Outcome of Personal Survey by Congressman D. J. Lewis Made Last Saturday

REPORTS ACUTE DISTRESS

A committee approved by Governor Albert C. Ritchie to investigate the relief needs of this county will meet with the County Commissioners and an invited group of citizens next Friday afternoon, August 19, at two o'clock in the Court House, Oakland.

The meeting has been postponed from tomorrow afternoon on account of the illness of two of the members of the committee.

This meeting is the outcome of a personal survey of conditions in this county by Congressman David J. Lewis, who was in Oakland and other county points last Saturday. He returned to Cumberland with a report of acute distress in the county, particularly in the mining region.

Mr. Lewis' report is confirmed by Mrs. E. Z. Tower, chairman of the local Red Cross activities, and George D. Browning president of the Board of County Commissionrs. Others are of the opinion that the report is somewhat exaggerated, although realizing that conditions here are serious. Dr. George E. Clarke, health officer, is of the opinion that the number of families being supported at public expense could be greatly reduced, and many residents of the county who have given the matter serious thought have expressed themselves at variance with Mr. Lewis' report of conditions now existing.

Mr. Lewis reported that there are 5,000 children in Garrett county without proper clothing and shoes with which to begin school in September. Last year, according to records from

Lesson for August 14

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS— DUTIES TO MAN

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:12-21.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Leviticus 19:18.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Ten Commandments.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Ten Commandments.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Loving and Helping Others.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian Interpretation of the Commandments.

The first table of the law sets forth the duties Godward, the second manward. The fifth commandment is the centerpiece of the Decalogue, keystone of the Sinaitic arch.

I. The Fifth Commandment (v. 12).

This commandment rests upon the fundamental basis of fact that parents stand with their children in the place of God.

1. How this commandment may be broken.

(a) By showing disrespect to parents. Disrespect is shown to parents: (1) By speaking of them as "the old man" and "the old woman." (2) By living such lives as cast reproach upon them. (3) By being ashamed to be seen in their company.

(b) By disobedience. It is right that the child should obey its parents and it is the responsibility of the parent to see that obedience is rendered.

(c) By not supporting them in old age. When parents are no longer able to care for themselves it is the children's duty to care for them.

2. Promises annexed to this commandment.

(a) "That it may be well with thee" (Eph. 6:3). (b) That thou mayest live long upon the earth.

II. The Sixth Commandment (v. 13).

The Scriptures show man's life to be sacred. Man was created in God's image. Every attempt to take human life is a thrust at God. This commandment may be broken:

By sinful anger (Matt. 5:22). By hatred (1 John 3:15). By immoderate use of meats and drinks. By immoderate recreation. By selling adulterated foods and diseased meats. By employers having unsafe surroundings, thereby causing the death of their employees. By failing to provide proper food and clothing for wives and children. By sending children to toil in shops and factories. By suicide. By infanticide. By wars.

III. The Seventh Commandment (v. 14).

This is a bulwark thrown around the home. The home is not only the oldest of God's institutions, but the foundation of them all. This commandment may be broken:

By unclean thoughts, affections, purposes, and imaginations (Matt. 5:27, 28; 15:19). By unchaste conversation. By wanton looks (Isa. 3:16; 2 Pet. 2:14). By immodest apparel. One's clothing is a strong factor in revealing character. By actual adultry. By divorce.

IV. The Eighth Commandment (v. 15).

This commandment strikes at the sin of theft. Many things are legally right which are morally wrong. This commandment may be broken:

By taking that which belongs to another. By using false weights and measnres. By selling adulterated foods and inferior goods. By extortion. By employers defranding employees, and employees failing to do honest work or to put in full time. By borrowing and not returning. By going into debt, knowing that payment is impossible. By usury. By graft. By lying advertisements. By making assignments to escape payment of debts. By gambling. By strong nations oppressing weaker ones.

V. The Ninth Commandment (v. 16).

The sin aimed at by this command is a most deadly one—that of lying. This commandment may be broken:

By actual lying. By perjury—swearing to falsehoods by the name of God. By slander—speaking against another falsely with a purpose to injnre. By tale-bearing (Lev. 19:16). This is commonly done by repeating a report without investigating its truthfulness. By creating a false impression (Exod. 23:1). By a breach of promise. By withholding the truth. By perverting the meaning of a statement. By exaggeration. By flattery. By recommending for a position of honor and trust a man who is unfitted for it. By granting a church letter to a man who is unworthy.

VI. The Tenth Commandment (v. 17).

This commandment strikes at the desire for that which is unlawful for one to have. The sin does not lie in the desire to possess things hut in the desire to possess that which belongs to another.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

Fifty-five years ago The Republican stated: "The burgess and bailiff of Oakland deserve the thanks of the people for the enforcement of the hog ordinance. It was passed three years ago but this is the first summer it has been enforced."

Perhaps in those days one had "a little wallow right in your own home." This summer the council ordered that dogs be tied. Fifty-five years ago it was hogs; now say the world is not improving.

On August 4th, 1873, the Oakland burgess and council passed an ordinance stating that "whoever engaged in throwing balls one to another or played ball in any way upon the streets should pay one to two dollars for each offense."

A resolution of July 16, 1875, provided a fine for "cutting, hacking, or injuring any lamppost, awning, spouting, door, window, railing, porch, tree, bridge, fence," etc.

If it doesn't take too long to decipher the writing of those days, I might find some more before long.

If we are to believe that Congressman Lewis' statement is true when he reported to the Cumberland newspaper appearing on Monday that 5,000 pupils in the county needed clothing and shoes for the fall term, we would have to scour the other counties and bring a large number of school children into Garrett. Last year's records show that there were approximately 3,900 children in the elementary schools of the county, and I am positively sure that all of them didn't need clothing or food, either.

However, the situation is bad enough.

Since the Girl Scouts are getting a gentleman lifeguard during their camping period of a week, the Boy Scouts have been begging me to get two ladies to act as their water escorts during the remainder of their camp outing.

And it is stated by good authority that the Girl Scouts left for camp Tuesday and forgot to take their grub along, having to send up for it late Tuesday evening. Of course, this may not be true, but you know how girls are.

Sombebody asked me the other day what I would think if I had five dollars in my pocket. I know what I'd think. I'd think I had somebody else's pants on.

* * *

Dear Scoop:—It has been said that since the close of the World War many more women get married than men. Has such a situation ever existed before?

Answer:—Not since the Garden of Eden. Before that, I can't say.

Dear Scoop:—Why is it, in this sad and bitter world, that we never strew flowers on a man's grave until after he is dead? Is this neglect due to lack of appreciation, or what?

Answer:—Or what.

Dear Scoop:—It has been proposed to shift Sunday from the end of the week to the middle, so as to divide the week into two parts. Why don't they do this?

Answer:—All Gaul was divided into three parts, and see what happened to it.

Dear Scoop:—If James married his widow's sister, would he be pretty ture of getting a good wife because he knew the family so well?

Answer:—Maybe James knew too much as it was.

Dear Scoop:—Don't you think that each one of us should learn to take care of himself in every way possible, even learning to trim his right-hand fingernails with his left hand and vice versa, so in case he got one of his arms cut off he could still perform this service for himself?

Answer:—Maybe you mean toe nails.

"Mercy me!" as McClelland Dixon would say it, or if you don't care for that expression, then use Bob Stemple's favorite, "Great day!" Here it is Thursday morning and nothing in the column yet, no ideas flitting from cerebral to cerebrum, and the deadline in a few hours. In addition, the Boss Editor is fuming. He refuses to permit Archibaldson to close the forms without Scoop's Column being inculded in the pages.

It's a tough racket to be flitting about so much that ideas don't have time to light. If I was in camp long enough things would have time sufficient to light there, but the only thing that remains upon my mind from there to the Treacy dum-dum-o lax program put on by broadcasting station WBLP on Monday evening, in charge of Gussie Stemple, Elzie Belzie Broadwater and Raspberry Browning and others.

But you wouldn't want to hear about that. And anyway the originators wouldn't want you to, either.

A Lesson in Speed and Convenience

Here's a man who's trying to call on all his friends and do all his business in person. He's tiring fast.

Here's a man who has a telephone—and uses it. Looks fresh and happy, doesn't he?

He knows his talks with friends are in themselves worth more than the cost of the telephone.

His telephone is good insurance too. Keeps him in instant touch with his doctor.

His wife likes the telephone because it saves her steps. She shops as well as makes social calls by telephone.

They both get a big thrill and much comfort in talking to their children in other cities.

They'll never forget that telephone call that brought him a job when he was out of work.

They can't understand how they ever got along by borrowing the use of their neighbor's telephone, or why some of their friends still try to do without one. Can you?

PRECAUTIONS ON PICNIC EXCURSIONS NECESSARY

Be Careful About the Water you Drink and the Food You Eat

"Going on a picnic? Or an excursion? Be careful about your food and about the water you drink if you want to avoid unplseasant after-effects," Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the State Department of Health, cautions prospective picnickers and excursionists.

"As to foods," Dr. Riley said, "first, be sure that what you take is perfectly fresh. Second, take things that won't spoil. During the hot, muggy weather that prevails at this time of the year, it is hard to keep any kind of food in good condition, as every housekeeper knows. Rich, perishable food taken off the ice and carried around for several hours before using will spoil very quickly.

"It is better to avoid rich salads and indigestible combinations and to stick to the simpler things. Sandwiches—of which an infinite variety can be prepared—cake, the simpler the better—and plenty of fresh, ripe fruit, are usually safe and satisfying and should form the principal part of your menu: With peaches, pears, bananas, oranges, tomatoes, cantaloupes, watermelons and other fruits in the market in abundance, as they are now, you have plenty of the latter to choose from. Whatever you take, don't overeat and don't indulge in all sorts of queer mixtures. If you do, the day after the picnic is not likely to be a pleasant one for you.

"And as a third precaution: Take your own drinking water, unless you are sure that the water supply of the place where you are going to spend the day is free from contamination. Thermos bottles, thermos jugs, fruit jars, can be impressed into service. It may be more trouble to carry water from home, but it is much safer than to drink water from a source that may be contaminated with disease germs."

ARE WE BARBARIANS?

The attempt of the allied governments to hitch together the cancellation of reparations and debts owed to the United States by entering into a more or less secret "gentlemen's" agreement at the Lausanne conference made it necessary that President Hoover, in order to disabuse the minds of European statesmen as well as our own internationalists of any cancellationist ideas, issue a statement in which he said that the American policy regarding war debts had not been changed. Nowhere did this statement of the American President kick up more violent reaction than in France. An example of the trend of French opinion on President Hoover's statement and the American position was given by La Liberte, French Nationalist paper, as follows:

"Verily Pontious Pilate was not more cynical or more odious. What was the Lausanne conference if not a direct and logical consequence of the Hoover moratorium? Does this government, which obeys gangsters, thieves and assassins of babies in the cradle, dare to assume such a height of moral authority that it thinks it can dictate to Europe and France?

"Americans are the only race which passed directly from barbarism to decadence without knowing civilization."

Such is the French outburst when it is suggested that after securing billions in territory and money from the defeated central powers, they pay something more on their debt to Uncle Sam. The very suggestion that we want any nation to pay its debts indicates that we are uncivilized! That we are even decadent as a nation, when we insist upon believing in the sancity of international obligations!

When we hearken back in memory a little more than a dozen years and remember how these same French newspapers were calling on us frantically to hurry, and when we try to visualize what sort of tune these same French newspapers might now be singing if Uncle Sam hadn't hurried, we marvel that barbarous and decadent Americans could have done so much. The more we read of Washington the more we think that he was right. You will remember that he said something about there being no such thing as permanent alliances and friendships among nations. This is especially true when one friendly nation lends another money, and then tries to collect after the crisis has passed.

TO INVESTIGATE RELIEF NEEDS OF COUNTY AUG. 16

the School Board office, less than 4,000 children attended the elementary schools, and it is obvious that everyone of them did not require assistance. Mrs. Tower states that she told Mr. Lewis that school children would need 5,000 pairs of shoes this school year.

However, conditions are critical in many sections. At present, according to Mrs. Tower's report made to The Republican Tuesday, 816 families, comprising 4,500 individuals, are now receiving aid in one form or another. At Kitzmiller alone, a mining town in the Potomac Valley, 300 sacks of flour are distributed weekly by the Red Cross. Since the first of the year two carloads of flour have been used and two additional cars have been requested to take care of the demand.

The Friends Service Committee expended $5,000 in this county last winter, giving hot lunches and milk to 401 school children in nine schools, and in supplying food to many preschool children, mothers and infants. This assistance ended on July 18. The Garrett County Chapter of the Red Cross has spent $550 since the first of the year and the Central and local Relief committees more than $600, made up of donations from local people and the Children's Aid Socitey of Maryland.

Mr. Lewis, in his report, said he learned that most of the miners in Garrett county are getting work only one day a week and many of them less. This report included towns of Crellin, Vindex, Kempton, Shallmar, Bloomington, Jennings, Kitzmiller and others.

The case of the farmers is not as acute as the miners. They are getting sufficient to eat as a general rule, although they have taxes to pay and practically no profits from their products with which to meet them. Many miners have set out garden plots this year which will help to support them during the winter, but in some mining sections the ground is too rocky for productivity.

Mr. Lewis said his visit in Garrett county had convinced him of the necessity of Governor Ritchie making application as soon as possible for relief under the Federal Relief act passed by Congress in the last days of the past session.

The Federal Relief act provides $300,000,000 for relief purposes to the states. Any state is permitted 15 percent of this amount, but application must come from the governor.

Delegates Attend Pittsburgh Tableland Meeting

Messrs. C. N. McIntire, Delbert Davis, Cheston H. Browning, and I. S. Middaugh attended the meeting of a committee in Pittsburgh which is planning for the joint conference of the Allegheny Tableland association and the Allegheny Tableland council of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, which is to be held at Mt. Lake Park August 26 and 27.

The Pittsburgh group plans to send a delegation larger in number than that which came on the two-day tour in June, and all the people of the Tableland are being urged to attend.

A definite program for community effort over a period of five years at least, is to be worked out, which is expected to help in the disposal of the products of the farmers of this region at right prices.

Pittsburghers are trying to learn what the Tableland area has to offer, who the producers are, what they have to sell and how they are willing to package it so that they may contact them with people in Pittsburgh who actually buy such products.

They also want the people of the Tableland to know what Pittsburgh has to offer them without encroaching on the business of the Tableland merchants, and they want to get better acquainted with the people of this section, person to person.

The first session of the conference will be a general one at 2 p. m., Friday, August 26. J. B. Watson, president, Allegheny Tableland association, will give the address of welcome, and Thomas A. Dunn, president, Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, will respond.

There will be addresses by a representative of Maryland and one from West Virginia. Joseph T. Miller, chairman of the Allegheny Tableland Council representing the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, will outline the plan of operation for the remaining sessions.

The remaining business part of the program will be broken into three sections. The first, Section "A", will be a conference of retail merhants, with W. M. Jacoby, secretary of the Retail Merchants association of Pittsburgh, presiding. The subject of the conference will be "Problems of Retail Merchants in Town and Country." General discussion at this meeting will be carried on under the heads of "Buying", "Publicity," and "Distribution," the latter including credit and finance. E. J. Priddey of the advertising staff of Gimbel Brothers, Pittsburgh, will head the discussion.

In order to obtain the maximum benefits of the conference, it is earnestly hoped that the merchants of the Tableland district will present their problems for suggestions and answers by men who have had wide experience in retailing ranging from the village store to the large metropolitan institution. The exchange of ideas and frank discussion of these problems will lead to mutual benefits for all attending.

Section "B" will be a conference for the wholesale dealers and will be in charge of W. P. Benson, president and general manager of the Dilworth Company, Pittsburgh. This section will discuss thoroughly the distribution and sale of Tableland products; the preparation and packaging of these products for market; and the prices probably obtainable for the various grades. This setion will also take up the problems of distribution of goods by wholesalers in the Pittsburgh market center, referring particularly to interchange of products between the Tableland and the Pittsburgh district on a wholesale basis.

The lest section, Section "C", will be a conference on regional planning. The chairman of this group will be Frederick Bigger of the Municipal Planning association of Pittsburgh, a nationally-known expert on this subject. The subjects to be discussed include Conservation, Forests and Streams, Recreation, Festivals, Regional Health, Sports, Rural Development and Transportation.

All three sections will convene at 3:00 and continue until 5:00 p. m., or such an hour as those in charge deem proper. It is intended that each section will draft and act on resolutions which will be presented to the evening session scheduled at 8:00 p. m.

At the evening session there will be addresses by spakers representing the three states included in the Tableland area.

These meetings are open to the public and it is desired to give as much opportunity as possible to develop personal acquaintanship. On Saturday morning, August 27, the meetings will begin at 8:30 and continue until 11:00

Boundaries of the Allegheny Tableland will be determined, and constitutional changes and organization to promote setup, cooperative effort, through the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, a general re-organization of the Allegheny Tableland association, and a method of properly financing future efforts will be considered. The matter of re-organization and constitutional changes will be presented by Joseph T. Miller, president, Allegheny Tableland Council.

Word has been received that John A. McSparran, secretary of Agriculture, of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has tentatively accepted an invitation to be present. It is also expected that Dr. Charles Reltell, director of the Greater Pennsylvania Council will be present during part of the convention.

After the adjournment at 11 o'clock Saturday there will be a tour to Blackwater Falls where lunch will be served. The visitors from Pittsburgh remaining over Saturday night will make a further tour of the beautiful scenic region in the southern part of the Tableland.

There is no restriction of any sort on attendance at this conference and all those who possibly can are earnestly urged to come and bring as many members of the family or friends as possible.

The business sessions will also be interspersed with appropriate musical programs under the direction of Mr. I. S. Middaugh and Miss Sara B. Huff, of Mountain Lake Park.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

Students of international affairs in the United States and elsewhere were much interested in the news from Washington the other day to the effect that nineteen nations of the Western Hemisphere, including, of course, the United States, had employed the Hoover "non-recognition" doctrine, first heard in the Chinese-Japanese dispute, in an effort to avert war between the South American republics of Paraguay and Bolivia. The adoption of this "non-recognition" doctrine by the leading powers of the Western Hemisphere, if permanent, will go a long way toward ending all imperialistic adventures in this western world.

The last paragraph of the note dispatched to the two governments, which are at this writing on the verge of war, reads:

"The Amerlean nations further declare that they will not recognize any territorial arrangement of this controversy which has not been obtained by peaceful means, nor the validity of territorial acquisitions whieh may be obtained through occupation or conquest by force of arms."

According to news dispathes, the adoption of this now famous doetrine for the purposes of the Western World was perfected in the diplomatic room of the Department of State at Washington where the representatives of nineteen nations had gathered in an effort to prevent war from breaking out on the South American continent. As the United Press puts it "they realize no doubt that they were making history—laying down a policy whieh may take its place beside the Monroe doetrine."

The application of the doctrine was made at the time for the reason that the bone of contention between Bolivia and Paraguay is the Gran Chaco territory which is claimed by both countries. The bit of territory is a typical tropical jungle but is said to be strategically important to both nations which eovet it as a part of their particular domain, and deny the title of the other country to any part of it.

Aside from the applieation of this doctrine to the present dispute, the fact that it was drawn up in the State Department at Washington, under the inspiration of the administration of the United States, ought to silence for all time the eheap cries of demagogues in the United States and politicians in Europe to the effect that Uncle Sam is pursuing an imperialistic policy in his dealings with the other American nations. If this policy of refusing to recognize any territorial arrangement based on force, is made the established policy for settling territorial disputes in the Western Hemisphere, it ought to set at rest any charges of imperialistic designs on the part of the United States.

It can be taken for granted that the United States is the most powerful nation in the Western Hemisphere. The United States above all other western nation has the power, if it so desired, to grab off by forceful means, additional territory on the American continent. The fact that it does not do so, coupled with the fact that it sponsors a policy of not recognizing territorial claims established by force of arms, is the best evidence that we harbor no appressive ambitions in the Western Hemisphere, or elsewhere. These facts establish a complete answer to the pink and yellow assaults occasionally made on Unele Sam, charging him with being an "imperialist" among nations.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

In 1874 a new feature appeared in the Maryland Bible Society's program for gettlng the Scriptures spread and read. Four Bibles were placed for reading by the passengers in eaeh coaeh of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and on each mail and baggage car for the employees. For these purposes 1,005 volumes had been given. The Western Maryland Railroad cars had also been supplied in like manner, and it was hoped to supply the cars of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad. Though the new Bible House was occupied in June, 1874, interest in the Society declined. The American Bible Society was sent only $1,200 in that year. Sixteen thousand, six hundred and seventeen volumes were issued, and only part of the time of four men as colporteurs was used.

The years from 1875 to 1879 were far from being years of prosperity for the Society. Despite the employment of ten colporteurs during much of this period, distribution of volunmes increased but slightly. The number per year varied between 18,000 and 20,000 volumes, while cash receipts were below the $5,000 mark for all these years but one.

In 1881 a legacy was received from the estate of Galloway Cheston which enabled the Society to enlarge its activities to some extent, though even with this help it was possible to send the American Bible Society only one thousand dollars.

In 1880, Mr. Charles Markell, a prominent merchant and importer of spiees, whose birthplace was Frederick, but who had removed to Baltimore while quite a young man, and who was a member of the Protestant Episcopal church, became president of the Society. The next year Rev. Thomas Myers returned as agency secretary, continuing in this office until his death in 1895. Rev. Robert M. Todd succeeded Dr. Myers and served three years.

In 1898 while war clouds were again in our national sky, and the boys in blue were entraining for Cuba, Rev. L. T. Widerman, D.D., a Methodist clergyman of much dignity and quiet earnestness, came to the Bible House where he served with much success until shortly before his death in 1917.

The span of years from 1898 to 1917 show a remarkable growth in the service rendered by this time-honored institution. Friends of the Bible made from time to time bequests either for endowment or for the work of direct distribution. Thousands of volumes were placed in jails, hospitals, almshouses, schools for delinquent boys and girls, the penitentiary, on ships, in army encampments and in the homes of the poor. Comfort and blessing have eome to thousands through this quiet ministry, the records of which will never be read until it is finally recorded in the Lamb's Book of Life.

Time and change are busy ever. The world in which we live is not the world of our Father's, but it is the world of our Father's God. He hath said: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

Our Readers Are Constantly Deciding To Buy Something That's Advertised In This Newspaper.

Our readers are always buying something. They never stop buying. They hold family buying conferences. They plan, they compare,they talk among themselves about buying this or that,they talk about cost, about quality and style. Buying, with our readers, never reaches a "standstill." Their wants are never completely filled.

They spend more money in a year than all of our banks take in on deposit. Their buying power is tremendous. It's the biggest factor in the community.

Their purchases consist of nearly everything under the sun, shoes, clothing, dresses, hats, groceries, fruits, jewelry, hardware, tires, automobiles, pastries, luxuries and necessities. Nothing escapes their buying.

And they are good buyers, too,—they shop around considerably—the largest market in which they do the most shopping is the advertising columns of this paper —they "shop" the advertisements in this paper from page to page—not a page, not an advertisement missing their searching eyes, time and experience has taught it's economy to "shop from the advertisements."

Experience is always a good teacher, and it has taught our readers that besides being thrifty in reading the advertisements, it is a time saver as well. They shop first in this newspaper, making a list of their wants, then, list in hand, go direct to the store, saving trouble and worry of running from one store to another hunting their wants.

They look upon the advertisements in this newspaper as a service rendered and read them as thoroughly as the news.

Mr. Merchant, you can talk to the biggest buying power in this community every week. You can talk to them in the quiet of their home, you can talk to them at a time when they are in a buying mood, when they are themselves talking it over, discussing their wants and what and where to buy. Your store can sit in on these buying conferences. They welcome you. They read every word in your advertisement about your store and your merchandise.

Invite them with an advertisement in this paper. Tell and you'll sell. The more you tell the more you'll sell.

MT. LAKE PARK

Annual Election Held Tuesday

There was but slight interest manifested in the election held Tuesday owing to the fact that there were but two candidates to fill that number of vacancies in the council. The election, therefore, was but a formality. Only 28 votes were cast, the result being that Jamie W. Elliott was re-elected, succeeding himself, and Gay W. Hayden chosen as members of Council. The Council as now constituted, is composed of Elliott, Camden, Hipsley, Schooley and Hayden. The term of Mayor Utterback does not expire until next year.

Rowdyism Not In Evidence

There seems to be a total lack of rowdyism in the Park this summer. We cannot help but believe this is owing to the kindly, but firm, admonitions of Town Bailiff Silas Wiley, who apparently commands the friendship as well as respect for his authority of those who are prone to overstep the mark. Of course, as has been often said in this column, one policeman cannot be expected to thoroughly patrol the entire Park, but he appears unexpectedly in unexpected places at unexpected hours.

A Suggestion

It is not within the province of this column to criticize or even to make suggestions to those in authority, but owing to frequent discussion there is one change we believe would be profitable and at the same time carry out the plans of the State Conservation Department, and that is to extend the time for closing Deep Creek Lake to fishermen. We personally know of a number of men who contemplate a late August and September visit to this resort, but are hesitating because of the lack of fishing and other outdoor entertainment. Except for the brown trout and other varieties of fish with which the lake has been recently stocked, there is nothing worthwhile to be taken by rod except the rock bass or tench, and the more of that pest caught the better chance the game varieties will have to develop. But the novelty of the number of "goggleeyes" that can be taken in a limited time and the fact that it is an incentive to spend a day among the beauties of the lake will attract many. It would seem that September 15th, with proper restrictions on the catching of game fish would be soon enough to close the season.

Tennis Tournament

While the entries are about thirty per cent under last year, yet there are a goodly number of players attending the tennis tournament and interest is keen among the contestants. The gallery has been below the average, but as large as could be expected during these trying times. However, with the general trend of business generally upward throughout the land we may expect to soon join in singing the popular song, "Happy Days Are Here Again."

Members of Browning Family Visit Old Homestead

On Saturday last a party consisting entirely of descendants of Meshach Browning, the pioneer hunter of this section, enjoyed a visit to the original homestead established on Sang Run by the hunter and his wife.

The old homestead was sold just one hundred years ago by Meshach to his son John Lynn Browning, and on this place seven of the eight sons and daughters of John Lynn and Maria Thayer Browning were born. Their youngest son Abel was born after the family moved from Sang Run.

Mr. Thomas J. Browning, of Thayerville; Mrs. John H. Riley, of Elkins, W. Va., and Mr. Abel S. Browning, the three surviving members of the John Lynn Browning family, were in the party last Saturday.

The outing was planned by Mr. Getty Browning, of North Carolina. He was accompanied by his daughter Harrietta, his brother, Mr. Richard Browning, of Oakland, his sister, Miss Nellie Browning, of Cleveland, Ohio, and by his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Patrick J. Garrett, of Deer Park.

Deep Creek Lake and the hydro electric plant of the Yougiogheny Power Company, both of which would seem marvels to their pioneer ancestors, were visited by the party en route to the old homestead.

Fire Department Called

The local fire department was called last Thursday afternoon to extinguish a fire which caught a stack of hay on Walter Savage's farm, Crellin road, three-fourths of a mile west of Oakland.

It is presumed that some children were playing about the stack and set fire to it. A portion of the hay was destroyed.

URGES VOTERS TO KEEP PROHIBITION IN CONGRESS

Anti-Saloon League Leader Says Society Must Maintain Non-Partisanship in Politics

TWO-DAY MEETING HELD

Speaking at the anti-saloon league meeting at Mt. Lake Park Sunday evening Dr. F. Scott McBride, national chairman of the organization, said the voters should keep the prohibition question in Congress, and that then socicty must maintain non-partisanship as to politics.

Dr. McBride asserted that congressmen were the only ones responsible for the maintenance or repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and that there was "too much talk of men higher up, who have no power to act in this matter."

During his addrcss hc said, "If I were to say anything about Hoover I would citc the old scripture where it said that a man ought to be careful of the company he keeps around him." Dr. McBride said that three-fourths of the President's cabinet were "outstanding wets" and mentioned espccially Walter Brown of Ohio, postmaster general, and thc political adviser of the Republican party. "Hoover has not surrendered to the bootlegger as some say, but is for law enforcement," Dr. McBride continucd.

Bootlegger Product of Saloon

"The bootlegger is a product of the saloon, not of prohibition, and the gangster, originating from Italy, was a recognized political power, not under prohibition, but under the saloon."

Thc dry leader cited statistics showing where prohibition was obtained through both parties, and urged the people to resist repeal and vote for congressmen and legislators who are dry. "If liquor comes back the saloon will be back."

"Pussyfoot" Johnson Talks

Approximately 1,000 persons from Wcstern Maryland, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania attended the meeting at which W. E. "Pussyfoot" Johnson also spokc, confining his talk mostly to the history of the efforts to prohlbit and regulate the llquor traffic.

He pointed out how in ancient times governments had tried to get rid of the evils of drink without trying to get rid of the drink. After 4,200 years of failure people thought of the idea of getting rid of the liquor. He also showed that when boasts were made concerning how the liquor question was managed in foreign countries, they never made public statistics showing the amount of crime, the number of dependents on the government, due to whiskey.

"America is going ahead with the prohibition system for good," he concluded.

George W. Crabbc, Superintendent of the Maryland Anti-Saloon League of Maryland, spoke on Saturday afternoon, while on Saturday evening addrcsses were made by S. J. Fickel, editor, The American Issue; and Dr. W. P. McGarey, chairman, committee on reform of the United Presbyterian churh of America.

Local ministers actcd as presiding officers, and were in charge of the devotional exercises.

Inskcep, of Martin, W. Va.

When the cars of H. L. Bittner and Dewey Bowser collided at corner of Third and Oak streets on Saturday, only slight damage was done. Bowser was fined $1 and costs for reckless driving. One heading south, and one heading north, turned west on Oak strcet, both having the green light.

PRISONER'S ATTEMPT AT SUICIDE NOT SUCCESSFUL

Is Found Hanging From Light Fixture In Cell Last Friday

Sam Piacuadio, Connellsville, a prisoner in the Garrett County Jail since the early part of July, failed Friday morning in an attempt to commit suicide. He was found hanging from a light fixture in his cell with a noose fashioned from the wire of a bed spring about his neck by Paul Kitzmiller, another jail inmate. He would have been dead in another few minutes, it was stated by those who attended him after he had been taken down.

He remained in a very serious condition until late Friday evening and physicians held out little hope for his recovery, but toward evening he rallied from the effects of his attempted self-destruction and is now walking about as usual.

"No more of that for me," he told State's Attorney Walter W. Dawson.

Piacuadio, the day previous to his attempt at hanging, attempted to take his life when he slashed his arm with a sharp instrument.

He has confessed, according to the State's Attorney, to being one of the four men implicated in the firing of the Shartzer house, corner Fifth and Green streets, on June 16. Martin Jubic and Louis Wisilosky, also of Connellsville, are in the jail here held in connection with the same case, while the fourth man alleged to be implicated in the matter, is a patient at a Connellsville hospital where he was entered for a surgical operation the day following his arrest on the charge by Pennsylvania officials. He will be brought to Oakland as soon as his condition warrants.

RELIEF INVESTIGATORS TO MEET FRIDAY AFTERNOON

Governor's Committee and County Commissioners to Confer on Relief Needs in County

CITIZENS ARE INVITED

Data on the organization of unemployment relief in Garrett county will be gathered, and a survey of relief needs will be discussed at joint meeting of the county commissioners, invited citizens, and a committee recently appointed by Governor Ritchie, at the Court House, Oakland, on Friday afternoon.

The committee, which was appointed as an advisory body on unemployment relief, is making a survey of conditions and the mechanics for their remedy in the counties. Walter N. Kirkman, State purchasing agent and committeeman, said the Maryland Children's Aid society, thru the nature of its functions, its contacts with family conditions and work with children, also has been called on to undertake some unemployment relief. The society has branches in eight counties, and assisted in unemployment relief here last winter and this spring.

The committee has made surveys in Washington, Anne Arundel, and Allegany counties. Congressman David J. Lewis recently made a personal survey of conditions in the county and reported acute distress in the county, particularly in the mining region.

In a report just issued by Dr. Geo. E. Clarke, health officer which includes the mining towns of Vindex, Kempton, Crellin, Shallmar, Kitzmiller, Friendsville and Jennings, it shows that 705 men are working where 1,210 were employed during normal times. This included Kitzmiller where 175 were working as compared to 200 in normal times. Since the report, however, the mines have closed and there will be no work there for at least five weeks.

In most of the mining communities the men were working only one day each week.

A report of the American Friends Service Committee shows that the following amounts were expended in Garrett county last winter and this summer: milk, $3,392.05; clothes, $500; powdered milk, $187.50; total $4,079.55. The report also included amounts of $300 furnished by the County Commissioners, and $300 furnished by Dr. Clarke, for shoes for children last winter. Approximately 1,000 pairs of shoes were distributed last year.

A report of all the county relief committees, made when they concluded their work this spring showed that 266 families, or 1,416 persons had received aid with clothing valued at $507, food valued at $1,110. This report stated that 146 were unemployed at the time, and 910 were under employed. The statement included the sections of the county around Grantsville, Friendsville, Sang Run, Accident, Oakland, Crellin, Loch Lynn, Kempton, and Kitzmiller.

Mr. Lewis stated in his survey that 816 familics comprising 4,500 individuals are now receiving aid in one form or another.

COUNTY FAIR DIRECTORS TO MEET FRIDAY NIGHT

Question as to Holding Annual Exhibition to be Discussed

A meeting of the Board of Directors of the Garrett County Agricultural Fair association has been called for Friday evening at 8 o'clock in the office of the county agent, court house, Oakland. Letters announcing this have been sent out stating that important business will be brought up for discussion.

The important business will in all probability concern the holding of the annual Fair. The Fair grounds were sold this spring and it was thought at the time that there would be no county agricultural exhibit this year. However, the State provides $1,250 if a fair is held within the county, and there is a possibility of it being held as in former years.

Members of the Board of directors include: Dr. Henry W. McComas, president; Charles W. Ream, vice-president; H. M. Speicher, secretary and general manager; Walter G. Meyers, treasurer; H. A. Loraditch, A. R. Martin, G. B. M. Friend, Daniel E. Orendorf, H. L. Porter, J. W. Whorton, A. D. Naylor, W. C. Welch, Samuel R. Ringer, George D. Browning, Henry P. Miller, Bert C. OFFICERS FIND QUANTITY OF MASH; TWO ARRESTED

Were Seeking Sugar Stolen from Piedmont Grocery Company

While following up a elue which officers thought might lead to the arrest of the thieves who entered the Piedmont Grocery warehouse recently, Samuel Cole and Clarence Spear came upon John Gucik, of near Uniontown, Pa., stirring some barrels of mash In a building on the Bud Hershman farm, several miles west of Oakland, last Saturday afternoon.

In the building were 16 50-gallon barrels of mash, but no still was discovered. John Gucik was arrested, as was also Raymond Phillips, likewise of near Uniontown. Phillips was not arrested until the second trip there. While on the first trip two men drove up in a Pennsylvania car but fled as soon as they saw the officers. Officers were unable to overtake them although they followed them as far as Oakland. Upon the return trip by a roundabout way, officers discovered and arrested Phillips.

A truckload of sugar, 1,800 pounds, had been brought in from Uniontown and it was the thought that this might be the sugar stolen from the Piedmont Grocery that prompted the investigation.

Three more were arrested for violation of the Federal Prohibition act on Tuesday when Federal agents arrested "Bud" Fazenbaker, Daniel Reed and John Brandlen, of Bloomington, on charges of manufacture and possession.

At a preliminary hearing before Justice W. A. Gonder, yesterday, Brandlen and Reed furnished bond in the sum of $500, while Fazenbaker is still in jail, in default of bond.

With a number of boat races, swimming events, and land sports arranged for the daytime, and a musical water pageant for the evening, everything is prepared for the Deep Creek Lake picnic and sports day on Saturday, August 20.

The pageant will begin at 7 o'clock with Father Time leading the procession, followed by over sixty decorated boats representing the states, commercial houses in Oakland and thruout the Tablelands. Sixty or 70 boats are available. Those interested in entering a float or taking part in the program are asked to communicate with the Mt. Lake Institute.

One large chorus will sing from a float anchored out in the lake and another chorus will be heard from the shore. The entire pageant will have many new features, according to Miss Sara B. Huff, music director, who is in charge. There will also be band and instrumental music as well as vocal talent. The music headquarters will be at Rainbow Inn where all singers are asked to report upon their arrival at the Lake.

As the granges of the county and surrounding counties are to hold their annual picnic on this day, they will take a special part in the pageant.

The entire day has been planned as a day for visiting friends, family reunions, picnics, and sports.

Boat Races at 3 O'Clock

The boat races will take place at 3 o'clock and there will be five classes, one race for inboard motors, three for outboard motors, and one canoe race. The starting point will be in the vicinity of Cabin Lodge, and the motor boat races will take place between the two bridges.

A baseball game is being arranged for the afternoon, on the Rainbow Inn peninsula.

Tugs of war and other land games, in addition to swimming races will be held in the morning and early afternoon.

B. F. CREECH TO JUDGE SHOW OF PUREBRED RAMS

West Virginian to Pass on Oakland Entries on September 3

B. F. Creech, of West Virginia Extension Servicc, Morgantown, a man well known to sheepmen in this territory, has been selected to judge the show of purebred rams here in Oakland on Saturday, September 3. For many years Mr. Creech has been in charge of livestock extension activities in his State. Those who have seen Mr. Creech work know from past observation and experience that he can be depended on to pick the low-set, wide-out, heavy masculine kind of rams that lamb producers prefer. About 25 head of purebred rams will be shown, most of them Hampshire and Shropshies.

The show will start at 1:00 o'clock and will be staged in the shade of the trees on a vacant lot near the center of town. All the rams in the show will be disposed of at auction following the show. Last year's auction resulted in an average of $17 per head on 20 head. According to County Agent John H. Carter the rome to be entered have already been picked from several leading Maryland and Pennsylvania flocks and are now being prepared for the show. With 25,000 to 30,000 market lambs being produced annually within a radius of 50 miles of Oakland, the wide interest in this project is clearly explained. Scrub lambs are low in price while the better grades, by comparison, are selling just about as well as anything produced on the farm.

Sheep Are Killed By Dogs in Sang Run Section

So far as can be ascertained by the owners, Wm. R. Browning, of Oakland; Wm. A. Smith of Hoyes, and Joe DeWitt, of Sang Run, twenty-six sheep belonging to them fell victims to the ravages of dogs on Monday night.

The three men had about 125 sheep and lambs on a range of 200 acres in the Sang Run section. The damage done their flocks was discovered on Tuesday morning and reported to the owners.

Lesson for August 21

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 33.

GOLDEN TEXT—And the Lord spoke unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend.—Exodus 33:11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Tent of Meeting.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Tent of Meeting.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Talking With God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Becoming Aware of God.

I. The Divine Command to Possess the Land (vv. 1-6).

1. The abiding purpose (v. 1). They were to go up and possess the land despite the fact that the calf-worship had broken the bond between them and their God. God spoke of them as the people whom Moses brought up out of Egypt, not as his own people. They had not shown any true penitence for their awful sin. Therefore God could not claim them as his own.

2. Divine aid promised (v. 2). Though their sins made it impossible for God to go with them, still he agrees to help them by sending an angel before them to drive out their enemies.

3. The threatened withdrawal of the divine presence (vv. 3, 5). God said, "I will not go up in the midst of thee, for thou art a stiff-necked people, lest I consume thee in the way." The presence of God in the midst of a sinning and impenitent people would mean death unto them. The mercy of God is often strikingly shown by his withdrawal from his people.

4. The effect upon the people (vv. 4, 6).

a. "When the people heard these evil tidings they mourned." They knew that no angel could make up for the great loss of the personal presence of God. They called it "evil tidings." Surely no tidings are so evil as those which tell of the withdrawal of the divine presence.

b. They stripped themselves of their ornaments, showing that the articles which indicated gladness and joy could not be consistently worn when God had departed. We must be stripped of all that pertains to self and carnal pleasures if we would be clothed with the divine blessing.

II. The Tent of Meeting (vv. 7-11).

1. It was pitched outside of the camp (v. 7). As a token of the severed fellowship, the symbol of God's dwelling place, the tent of meeting was placed without the camp.

2. Moses in communion with God (vv. 8-10). Because Moses had not transgressed God's law, he still had fellowship with God. The visible sign to the people that God honored Moses was the descent of the "cloudy pillar" as Moses entered the tent of meeting.

3. Moses the friend of God (v. 11). This is one of the most beautiful expressions of personal fellowship to be found in all the Bible, if not in all literature. Friendship implies mutual confidence and sympathy, a disposition to share each other's secrets.

4. Joshua at home in the Tabernacle (v. 11). Joshua was not involved in the rebellion of the people. Because of his fidelity and in recognition of his unbroken fellowship, he was privileged to abide in the tent.

III. Moses' Prayer (vv. 12-23).

Moses' mind was somewhat perplexed, therefore he came to the Lord for the solution of his problem. God had said that he would send an angel to carry out his covenant obligation concerning the people in the possession of the land. Moses desired fuller knowledge of this angel so that he might act intelligently with reference to the matter. He asked for three things—

1. Fuller knowledge (vv. 12-14). In order to lead the people, he needed to know more fully his God. Intelligent and acceptable service is only possible as one knows God. God graciously responded to this request, "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."

2. "If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence" (vv. 15-17). Moses was convinced that no substitute could take God's place even though that one were an angel. He argued that it would be better to perish in the wilderness than attempt to go into Canaan without God. God's presence today is necessary in order to convince the world that he has called us.

3. "Show me thy glory" (vv. 18-23). Moses wanted a new vision of God for his new task. To this request God responded by giving assurance that he would make his goodness to pass by Moses. God's supreme glory is his goodness.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

Don't ever let anyone tell you that round rocks are soft. I thought they were until yesterday evening, and as a result I am propped up here by the typewriter with reinforced cushions under my feet. And when I walk it is as if I have eggs under them, and the pains shoot clear to the roots of my blond locks.

You know the old story of taking the short cut to your destination in order to save time, only to find that the hardships over the short cut are worse than the extra time spent in going the roundabout way. If it's a short cut across a field, the mad bull always appears. It it's across water, it's something else.

This time it was something else. From the national guard camp at Caddell, on Cheat river, to the Boss Editor's farm, by way of Kingwood and a perfectly good road, it measures about 5 miles. From the camp to the farm vit crossing Cheat River it is about six hundred yards after crossing the rocky riffles of Cheat to the tune of about 100 yards. Did I say 100 yards? It felt like 100 years to those flat feet of mine.

First, of course, somebody had to make the suggestion that we take the short cut. Efficiency expert and all that. You know the type. Then next the gullible type like myself who believed what the other fellow said.

Next the detailed process. Took off shoes, socks. Took look at water and decided water couldn't come up to knees. Rolled up pants to above knees. Shoes in left hand. Discovered rocks to be hard and slippery. Longing look back at shore. Desire to have man who suggested trip within my grasp enters mind for first time. More steps and more longing looks back. Now in above knees and pants appear droppy. Too late, there they go—

One more look back. What is this an Indian chief tells his warriors? A brave never gives up! Oh, all right, I wasn't going to turn back now anyway.

What I wouldn't give for an old pair of shoes, also the fellow who suggested this! Ow! There goes my big toe. It couldn't possible be there yet, but it might be at that. My feet were numb long ago. And there's no relief in the knowledge that we must recross the same way. Boy, the sandy shore ahead!

And now the return journey begins, this time with the addition of a nice young pullet in my left hand, pants off and rolled up under my shirt. Shirt tucked under underwear. Part way across the chicken goes under for a count of four. Likewise wristwatch. In bending over on that last slip the water reaches my pants again regardless of having them under my shirt. Chicken gets chill. And we're almost over now. Just three more steps and there go my shoes down for the count. Soaked to the gills. I might just as well have worn them. Just like me to have finished something, only to find out how it could have been done easier, after it is too late.

Maybe I ought to mention that two others crossed the breakers with me—Mrs. Scoop herself and none other than Sparky Casteel. And did they gripe as much as I did! Did their feet hurt as much as mine did? No.

At the movies the other night some mug kept coughing down my neck. As soon as I could I moved to another seat only to come away with a wad of chewing cud stretched over my trouser seat. It seems, wherever I go lately, I get it in one place or another.

* * *

Last week a man's son had the unique distinction of taking his father's second bride on her honeymoon while the groom stayed at home and attended to business at Deer Park.

The days of the week were named for gods and goddesses of olden times. For instance, Wednesday for Woden, Thursday for Thor, Saturday for Saturn. Last week the Democrat was undecided about one day because some Oaklanders spent "Huesday" in Johnstown. Just whose day is it anyway?

"Political platform, like steps on a motor coach, are used to get in on and not to stand on," said the anti-saloon league speaker Sunday night. Lots of times, if they don't stand on them, though, they are told where to get off.

I've never used a platform myself, but anyway, here's where I gt off until next week.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

We have come now to the contemporary period of Maryland Bible Society history. From 1885 to 1894 the affairs of the Society were guided by Mr. Charles Markell, who as president brought a ripeness of judgment and experience which eminently fitted him for his task.

Mr. Charles J. Baker gave but one year of leadership to the Society, but added much to its progress and development during that time. Mr. Baker was born in 1821. He was a graduate of Dickinson College, and was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a manufacturer of window glass, bottles and paints; was president of the City Council in 1860-62; was editor of the Baltimore Exchange newspaper; was president of the Canton Company and of the Franklin Bank. He was largely instrumental in building the Union railroad with its tunnel under the city. During these two presidencies the average number of volumes distributed was 21,000 a year.

Eighteen hundred and ninety-one was a good year for the Maryland Bible Society. We learn that in that year three colporteurs were employed in Baltimore in the winter and six in the summer in the counties. Nearly $5,000 was received in gifts, and $1,000 given to the American Bible Society, which, however, received nothing in 1892.

In 1894 Mr. John R. Kelso was chosen president. He was a prominent hardware merchant, and in 1892, was chosen on the Republican ticket to the second branch of the City Council. Mr. Kelso esteemed the honor conferred on him highly, saying: "I would rather be a member of the Board of the Bible Society and the Tract Society than a member of the United States Senate." Mr. Kelso lived only a year to enjoy this honor, when he was succeeded, in 1895, by Mr. German H. Hunt.

Mr. Hunt was a Methodist and was prominent in the organization of the Baltimore Trust Company. He was born in 1829, and, learning the trade of a machinist, associated himself with Robert Poole in 1851, in the firm of Poole and Hunt, which carried on a very successful business in Woodbury, from which Mr. Hunt retired in 1889. He served as President of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association and of the board of directors of the Maryland Institute. During the later years of his presidency he was often absent from the meetings of the board of managers, at which times the chair was taken by one of the vice-presidents, Mr. John P. Ammidon or Mr. Benjamin F. Bennett.

In 1902 Richard K. Cross, Esq., became president of the Society. He was a strikingly handsome man, of rare charm, a graduate of Princeton, an ardent yachtsman, an elder in the Presbyterian Church, a lawyer of good ability, who gave much time to the Society's interests.

The Supreme Forest Woodmen Circle was organized in Omaha, Neb., in 1891 by the officers of the Woodmen of the World, and was composed of members of the Woodmen of the World, their mothers, wives, sisters and daughters. The first beneficiary certificates were issued in 1893. In 1895 the society was incorporated; an office separate from the Woodmen of the World was established; the first Monthly Tidings, a magazine for its members, was published and is still published.

The Woodmen Circle affiliated with the National Fraternal Congress in 1902. In 1907 women replaced men in all national offices. Effective January 1, 1920, the society was placed on a legal reserve basis. A juvenile auxiliary was established in 1922.

The Society has erected and maintains a home for aged members and orphan children at Sherman, Tex., and recently completed a second unit for orphan children, the Pennsylvania Cotaage. A national headquarters building at Omaha, will be ready for occupancy the first of next year.

April 1, 1932, the society's assets had reached the $26,000,000 mark. More than $25,000,000 of this is invested in municipal, county and school bonds. There are more than 119,000 adult members and more than 34,800 junior members of the society.

FACTS IN THE CASE

There has been a great deal of comment, naturally, and some confusion of the facts of the expelling of the remnant of the army of the so-called bonus marchers from the District of Columbia recently. Most of the newspapers of the country presented the facts clearly and fairly, but some confusion has resulted from the attempts of one or two chain newspaper systems to make political capital out of the incident, and to distort the facts so as to give the impression that there was bloodshed and undue severity in the military operation.

As a matter of fact the only casualties resulted from the resisting of the attempt of the police to remove the bonus forces from property along Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington on which the government was ready to commence building, and which the marchers refused to vacate. President Hoover did not resort to the use of Federal troops until informed by the heads of the District government that the situation was out of the control of the civil authorities and that rioting and further loss of life might result if the situation was not controlled.

After the soldiers took charge not a single man was injured. Nobody was shot and nobody was hurt. The soldiers did not set fire to the shacks of the marchers. This was done by the men who were abandoning the camp. And firing done afterward was to complete the work of removing the half runined shacks which remained.

There never has been and cannot now be any doubt about the overwhelming sympathy of the American people of all creeds and parties with the World War veterans and their troubles. If it were possible for the government to now complete the deferred payments to the soldiers without ruining the entire credit of the nation and promoting further economic stringency which would affect all—including the veterans themselves—there is little doubt that this would be done and done promptly.

In the World War the losses of the American Army, while serious and deplorable, were but a fraction of the losses of the other nations on both sides of the struggle. And yet this year the United States is perhaps paying more annually in veteran relief than all of the other nations which were in the war, combined. And Uncle Sam will continue to take care of those who suffered as a result of the war so long as there is a dollar to be raised for the purpose. The yellow and pink newspapers and the yellower and pinker politicians who try to give the impression that Uncle Sam is not grateful and is not doing his bit, are rendering no service either to the nation or to the veterans themselves.

The great majority of the veterans who went to Washington during the so-called bonus march were patriotic, law-abiding citizens. Many of them left following the adjournment of Congress. The remnant became the prey of communistic and radical leaders whose chief purpose was not to help the veterans or their cause but stir up trouble for the people of the United States. That was the real source of the trouble in Washington recently.

If it would be possible to punish these radical leaders, none of them war veterans themselves, and the demogogic politicians who encouraged and inspired the ill-fated bonus march in misrepresenting the facts to the marching veterans, ninety-eight per cent of the people of the United States would throw their hats in the air and give a shout of approval. It is a pity, however, that the innocent must suffer to further the designs of those who have as their object either selfish political aggrandizement or the creation of revolution in the United States.

WHAT ADVERTISING IS DOING

Efficient newspaper advertising is still doing the trick of bringing profits to advertisers and perhaps a little bit better in the depression years than at other times. The American Newspaper Publishers' Association in a recent survey found out these interesting facts among others:

Four tobacco manufacturers increased their advertising space in 1931 and three showed gains, the fourth showing a slight loss over the previous year. An automobile company which increased its newspaper advertising outlay 33 per cent increased its earnings 40 per cent.

An outstanding showing was that made by a manufacturer of electric refrigerators, who spent $200,000 in the newspapers and increased the number of dollars taken in by 460 per cent.

Going back to the tobacco companies, their total expenditures for newspaper advertising were increased from $20,000,000 in 1930 to $26,000,000 in 1931 and their aggregate earnings increased from $105,200,000 to $111,300,000. Four other tobacco companies decreased their newspaper advertising space in 1931 and these showed a falling off of 45 per cent in net earnings.

If you have a real message to offer in the advertising pages it will "get over." The indications of the last two weeks have shown that the public is beginning to "loosen up" with its money. Those who realize this in time will make money out of that knowledge.

COUNTY AGENT'S COLUMN

J. H. CARTER,
Resident County Agent,

Meat Stamp Is Harmless

Inquiries have come to the Extension Department concerning the practice of butchers in trimming the familiar purple Federal inspection stamp from fresh meat at the time of sale. This is entirely unnecessary, department specialists explain, as the fluid used in marking meat is made according to a Government formula from harmless ingredients—as harmless as fruit juices.

Formerly labels were attached to the meat that had been Federally inspected and passed, but this proved expensive and otherwise unsatisfactory. The purple stamp provides a safe, clear and permanent mark of inspection for the benefit of the meat buyer. Its presence signifies that the meat came from an animal that passed a thorough inspection by men trained in the work.

Investigation of Sheep Made by County Agent; Remedy Given

More than a dozen inquiries have been received at the office of John H. Carter, county agent, in regards to sheep that are dying.

Upon investigation it was found that every flock was badly infested with stomach worms, and all were treated with the bluestone formula. Sheep owners are having more trouble than usual with parasites, Mr. Carter stated, the weather conditions being the main cause of the increased infestation.

The method of control follows:

Method of Control

Sheep to be treated should be kept away from feed and water for 12 to 18 hours. A solution of copper sulphate (bluestone) and nicotine sulphate (Black-leaf 40) is then administered by means of an ordinary baby bottle or small bulb syringe. One ounce of bluestone is first dissolved in a quart of hot water. This is mixed with one and one-half ounces of Black-leaf 40 and two quarts of water, making a total of three quarts of solution. This is sufficient to treat 20 or 25 sheep, it is said. The mixing must be done in a non-metallic container as the ingredients will corrode metal.

Mature sheep should receive a dose of 3 to 4 ounces of the solution, lambs 1 to 2 ounces while older sheep and yearlings need about 2½ to 3½ ounces depending upon size and vigor. After treatment the sheep must be kept off feed and water for about 5 hours. When finally put back on pasture the sheep should be changed often to different fields.

If the cases are severe, a second drenching should be given one week after the first, although in the majority of cases one treatment a month is sufficient. The dose should be measured out very accurately as carelessness in, this respect often results in death.

Newspaper Advertising Costs

LET'S BUY IT !

The more
You tell 'em
The more

Our Readers Are Constantly Deciding To Buy Something That's Advertised In This Newspaper.

Our readers are always buying something. They never stop buying. They hold family buying conferences. They plan, they compare,they talk among themselves about buying this or that,they talk about cost, about quality and style. Buying, with our readers, never reaches a "standstill." Their wants are never completely filled.

They spend more money in a year than all of our banks take in on deposit. Their buying power is tremendous. It's the biggest factor in the community.

Their purchases consist of nearly everything under the sun, shoes, clothing, dresses, hats, groceries, fruits, jewelry, hardware, tires, automobiles, pastries, luxuries and necessities. Nothing escapes their buying.

And they are good buyers, too,—they shop around considerably—the largest market in which they do the most shopping is the advertising columns of this paper —they "shop" the advertisements in this paper from page to page—not a page, not an advertisement missing their searching eyes, time and experience has taught it's economy to "shop from the advertisements."

Experience is always a good teacher, and it has taught our readers that besides being thrifty in reading the advertisements, it is a time saver as well. They shop first in this newspaper, making a list of their wants, then, list in hand, go direct to the store, saving trouble and worry of running from one store to another hunting their wants.

They look upon the advertisements in this newspaper as a service rendered and read them as thoroughly as the news.

Mr. Merchant, you can talk to the biggest buying power in this community every week. You can talk to them in the quiet of their home, you can talk to them at a time when they are in a buying mood, when they are themselves talking it over, discussing their wants and what and where to buy. Your store can sit in on these buying conferences. They welcome you. They read every word in your advertisement about your store and your merchandise.

Invite them with an advertisement in this paper. Tell and you'll sell. The more you tell the more you'll sell.

MT. LAKE PARK

A New Racket

While this happened in Oakland, we venture to say that some of the wise boys of the Park fell for this new racket.

There appeared in one of the shops of the county-seat a well appearing stranger with a tale of depressed finances and the offer of a bargain in socks. It was with a good line of sales talk that he produced a bundle of what, even in these stringent times, are considered a necessity, for men at least, but there are many women doing without. It contained an even dozen of different patterned hose for gentlemen that would delight the eye of even the most modest—and for one buck.

The customer considered the fact that his supply was more "holy than righteous" and that the heels and toes consisted chiefly of intricate designs, interwoven and somewhat bumpy. He swallowed the hook, line and sinker and in the evening gleefully exhibited his depression bargain, with visions of being able to dress without finding the toe of his socks encircling his ankles.

He selected for his evening's wear what he thought was a blue-dotted pair, but one sock was blue-dotted and the other red. Another had a blue top and toe and the other a blaek toe and top. One cream-colored sock was plain and the other had a clock design. And thus it went. He had purchased a bunch of samples and out of the dozen pairs he finally matched up six. And was his face red?

Our Gang Party

In the wide open spaces within the Allegheny House sector is the headquarters of "Our Gang," composed of youngsters ranging from six to ten years. It is well organized and operates as a unit. What one member fails to think of another immediately proposes, so that there is not a minute of the day without fun, frolic and fury, including the hunt for pirate loot and the tracking of the wily red skin.

Last Monday the Gang assembled at the home of Major and Mrs. Skyles to attend a party in celebration of the birthday of Wier Pollard, their grandson, an honored member. The afternoon was spent in games which only kids can devise, the meaning of which they only can interpret, and if Major and Mrs. Skyles appear somewhat careworn, the reason is apparent. The Gang and friends present were Skippy Scott, Baby Scott, David Morgan, Betty Morgan, Raymond McCuteheon, Juddy Wiley, Bruce Taylor, Willard Hayden, Ned Kimmell, Johnny Sincell, Mary Lois Crain, Martha Towler and the honoree, Wier Pollard.

It is reliably reported that the new hard-surface road from the Park to Deer Park, beginning at the Bowling Alley, will be commenced within the next thirty days. We trust our information is correct, as the building of this piece of roadway will be of great benefit to this section of the county.

Operations will begin this week at the Mount Airy Canning Company's plant on the corn pack for the season. While the prospects are fair for a good crop, just at present a good soaking rain would be of great benefit not only to the corn but also all other crops.

Personal Items

The many friends of Mrs. W. T. Burch will be glad to learn that she is improving following a recent accident in whieh she was painfully injured.

Mr. John O. Morgan has returned from a business trip to New York City.

Mr. Edward A. Murkland, who has been spending some time with his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson L. Camden, has returned to his home in Detroit.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Eehard and son left by motor Monday for Oklahoma City, where they expect to remain during the winter.

Mrs. Annie Vochrodt and daughter Miss Virginia, Fairmont, are guests in the Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Curtis B. Fleming, of Fairmont, were week-end guests at the cottage of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Comerford.

Mrs. Isobel D. Hill and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Cale have returned from a trip to Washington where Mrs. Hill was called by the illness and death of a friend.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred C. Fleming and daughter, Mrs. Charles Bell, spent Tuesday in Fairmont.

Members of the M. E. church will conduct a chieken supper this evening, beginning at 5:30, in the basement of the church. It will requlre fifty eents to participate at the table.

The ladies of the U. B. church will also serve a chicken supper in the Ladies' Aid Hall, Loeh Lynn, on next Thursday evening, August 25, beginning at 5:30.

As you have noticed on the program, next Sunday will be celebrated as "Octogenarian Day." Already, we understand, between thirty and forty of the 80-year old young boys have enrolled. If there are any others get in touch with Miss Huff or Rev. Middaugh between now and Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. E. M. Gilpin has returned to her home in Cumberland after spending some time as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Ream.

It was a delightful occasion when approximately one hundred friends and neighbors assembled at his residence and surprised Mr. R. L. Hamill on his 74th anniversary. Bob does not look his age by twenty years and remains as active and energetic as a youngster.

Services in the Park Methodist ehureh on Sunday will be Sunday school at 10:00 a. m.; morning service at 11:00 and evening service at 7:30 o'clock.

We certainly sympathize with Jay Bell, son of Mrs. Alma Bell. He had his two pups killed within a few days. The first was accidentally killed by an automobile and the second was poisoned. Great indignation is expressed by the good citizens of Loeh Lynn over what is apparently the wholesale placing of poisoned meat about the town. The piece which caused the death of the Bell pup was found and contained sufficient poison to kill a number of people. At this time of year when children are permitted to play out of doors it is a dangerous practice, as it seems to be a natural inclination of children to plaee anything edible in their mouths that they may pick up.

Anyone seeing the sad and almost hopeless expression on Jay's faee when he was telling the writer about losing his seeond pet a day or so after the first had been killed, could not have failed to note sadness and tragedy written there. We felt darn sorry for him. Carl Swiers also had a pe. poisoned.

RURAL CHURCH SUNDAY TO BE CELEBRATED AT PARK

The special service to be held at Mt. Lake Park this Sunday will be known as Rural Church Sunday, with emphasis being placed on making this meeting the rallying point for the leadership and congregations of the churches of all denominations in the Tablelands.

Ministers and leaders will be guests of honor, and choirs are asked to come in groups to lead in the singing. Favorite hymns of the rural churches will be sung. A band will begin playing a two o'clock, preliminary to the main program.

Ministers of all the churches are being asked to announce the program at Sunday school and church services in the morning.

J. E. Harned to Lecture

Joseph E. Harned, of Oakland, will deliver his illustrated lecture in the auditorium on Saturday evening, beginning at 7:30, under the auspices of the Mt. Lake Institute. His theme will be "The Wild Flowers of the Alleghanies."

Miss Sara B. Huff, music director, will lead some singing from the screen, following which Mr. Harned will show his slides and deliver his lecture.

Mr. Harned is author of the book, "Wild Flowers of the Alleghanies," which has gained nation-wide recognition and is being adopted as a standard text in several universities. The public is invited.

Homecoming Service

Eighteen octogenarians were guests of honor at the Homecoming service at Mt. Lake last Sunday when eighteen children presented a rose to each one of the eighty year old friends. After the service, cake and ice cream were served to the honored guests. The oldest one present was George Marley, Deer Park, a civil War veteran. Next in age was J. Murray White, Loch Lynn, who was overheard telling Truman Casteel that he could still bind a sheaf of grain as quickly as ever.

Swepson Earle, State conservation commissioner, delivered the address on the conservation of our natural resources. Music was furnished by the Friendsville band. Vocal numbers were rendered by Miss Johnson and Kenneth Malcolm, of Barton.

SHOW OF PUREBRED RAMS EXPECTED TO DRAW MANY

Will Be Held in Oakland Saturday Afternoon, September 3

On Saturday, September 3, sheepmen from all parts of Western Maryland and nearby Pennsylvania and West Virginia counties, will gather in Oakland to attend the second annual purebred ram show and sale. All arrangements are completed.

"For the first time since the purebred ram shows were started several years ago, I have been able to do considerable sorting and culling to make the entries measure up to a high standard of excellence," states Mr. Clark, who is managing the affair.

Mr. B. F. Creech, Extension Husbandman of the West Virginia University at Morgantown, will act as judge. The show of all rams entered will take place at one p. m., and this will be followed immediately by the auction of all entries.

This year's entry list includes rams from the following flocks: H. P. Miller, Grantsville, 4 Shropshires and 4 Hampshires; E. D. Stotlemyer, Boonsboro, 5 Shropshires; Buckland Hall Farms, Nokesville, Virginia, 4 Shropshires and 1 Hampshire, and Mrs. A. Hamilton, Bonny Leas Farm, Johnstown, Pa., 6 Hampshries. All these rams are registered and a registration certificate goes with each one.

The event will be occur in the shade of the trees on a vacant lot in the center of town—same place as last year. Last year's average was $17.80 on twenty head.

Lambs have been higher in price lately. Beef cattle are 20 per cent higher and hogs have practically doubled in value in recent weeks. With a good fat, early lamb worth as much as an acre of wheat and with all livestock prices on the incline, the importance of the livestock industry is being more generally appreciated.

A teachers' meeting will be held at Oakland High school for all teachers of the county, on September 1 and 2.

LABOR DAY PICNIC PLANS CALL FOR NEW FEATURES

Parade With Visiting Fire Companies and Drum Corps To Be Feature of Morning Activities

ATTRACTIONS ON GROUNDS

Plans for the thirteenth annual Labor Day picnic under the auspices of Garrett Lodge, No. 113, Knights of Pythias, are almost completed.

Labor Day, Monday, September 5th, will soon be here and with its coming will arrive a picnic with several new features. It will be held in Helbig's Grove, north edge of town.

Beginning in the morning at ten o'clock will be the grand feature parade, officially opening the day. This parade will consist of local and visiting fire companies, floats and decorated automobiles, fraternal organizations and funny clowns. Music will be furnished by the Crellin Band, Oakland Band, Friendsville Band, the American Legion Drum and Bugle Corps and the Junior Drum and Bugle Corps. Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts and Red Cross Nurses will also take part.

On the picnic grounds will be the Weaver Park Attractions of Pittsburgh, Pa., with Ferris wheel, merry-go-round, chairplanes and other concessions. There will also be a dancing pavilion where one may square dance throughout the afternoon and evening. Old time fiddlers will furnish the music.

An address will be made by a prominent speaker to be announced in this paper next week. Picnic lunches will be served at the picnic grounds. Band concerts will be given during the day and evening.

To those who are going to hold family reunions a cordial welcome is extended to have their gatherings in connection with this picnic. There is lots of shade, good drinking water and plenty of free parking space.

Then in the evening there will be a gigantic display of fireworks.

PROGRAM ANNOUNCED FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL MEETING

To Be Held In Kitzmiller M. E. Church, Sunday, September 4

A detailed program for the Garrett County Sunday School convention to be held at Kitzmiller on Sunday, September 4, in the Methodist Episcopal church, has been announced by Miss Lillian McCormick, state officer of the Sunday School Association.

There will be morning, afternoon and evening sessions with Harry I. Wilson, E. R. Jones and Rev. C. A. Shilke, respectively, presiding.

Devotions at the three sessions will be conducted by O. P. Jones, Delbert Davis and Miss Pauline Albertson, the latter young people's worker of Salisbury, Md. Rev. Charles Kupfer will make the address of welcome at the morning session and Miss Lillian McCormick will speak on "What it Means to be a Teacher."

He will arrive from Kansas, his former field, on September 1 to succeed Robert Davids, who has served here for four years as general secretary of the Maryland Delaware Council of Religious Education.

RELIEF NEEDS ARE AIRED AT MEETING LAST FRIDAY

Garrett County Needs Paid Worker at Head of Central and District Committees

TO MEET SEPTEMBER 7TH

That Garrett county could take care of its relief needs of the coming winter by the reorganization of the central and district relief committees with a paid social worker at its head, was voiced at the meeting last Friday afternoon when three members of the Governor's committee on unemployment relief discussed the problem with the County Commissioners and a number of invited citizens of the entire county.

Reorganization of the volunteer committees would be futile, it was pointed out, unles there was a paid worker to direct their activities. Funds which were obtained last year from the Maryland Children's Aid society for this work, will not be available this year, and the question of getting the money with which to pay a worker, was discussed.

To Meet September 7

The former Central committee and chairmen of the district committees will meet Wednesday, September 7, with the Board of County Commissioners to decide the fall and winter program and the results of the meeting with the governor's committee, which includes Walter N. Kirkman, state purchasing agent; Paul T. Beisser, president of the Maryland State conference of social worker; and Harry Greenstein, director of Associated Jewish charities of Baltimore.

Mr. Beisser stated that in the five counties which the committee already had visited they had decided on a united effort through a centralized committee to meet their own situation as best they could, as any financial assistance from the State or outside sources was doubtful.

It was estimated that approximately $12,000 would be needed in the county in addition to any food and clothing that may be collected, to take care of the relief situation this winter. Private contributions of food and clothing have been almost entirely exhausted, members of last year's committees stated.

Miners in Distress

Representatives from the mining districts of Garrett county said hundreds of families were in distress and that conditions were going to be worse than last year. They said the entire situation lays with activity at the mines this winter. "Give us three days of work each week," one representative said, "and we can live." Most of the mines in the county have been working one day a week, and some of them have been closed for months.

Rev. Kupfer, Kitzmiller, said that 2,100 were being helped in that vicin-

Fines Imposed in Automobile Cases

As the outcome of an automobile collision near Bittinger on July 3, Jennie Burkholder, of Friendsville, was fined $5 and costs before Justice W. A. Gonder on Monday on the charge of failing to keep to the right of the center of the road. She appealed the case.

The car driven by the woman collided with the car driven by Alvie Wilt, of Bittinger, and damage to the Wilt car were estimated at $65, with practically the same for the other ear.

Wade H. Sherman, Parsons, W. Va., was fined $1 and costs for having no registration card and $1 and costs for reckless driving on Sunday before Justice Gonder.

Sherman claimed a bee got into his car causing him to strike the automobile owned by Merrill Crane, parked on Third street. The rear of the Crane machine was slightly damaged.

1933 License Plates To Be Blue and White

White numerals on a blue background will be the color scheme next year for the Maryland automobile license plates, it was announced at the office of the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles.

In 1934 the color scheme will be reversed. The selections are made in advance so that samples of the tags may be sent to other States, which, as a matter of good manners, make an effort not to duplicate the color scheme.

TO HOLD ANNUAL COUNTY FAIR SEPTEMBER 20 TO 23

Officers and Directors All Re-elected at Meeting Held Last Friday Evening in Oakland

PREMIUM LIST IS SAME

At a meeting of the officers and directors of the Garrett County Agricultural Fair association held last Friday evening in the Court House, Oakland, it was unanimously decided to hold the annual Garret County fair on September 20, 21, 22, and 23, at the Fair grounds.

Since the grounds were sold early this spring, it was doubtful whether the annual exhibit would take place, but arrangements for the use of the buildings and grounds has been made by Henry M. Speicher, secretary and general manager, who was re-elected at Friday's meeting.

All officers and directors were re-elected including Dr. Henry W. McComas, president; Charles W. Ream, vice-president; H. M. Speicher, secretary and general manager; Walter G. Meyers, treasurer; H. A. Loraditch, A. R. Martin, G. B. M. Friend, Daniel E. Orendorf, H. L. Porter, J. W. Whorton, A. D. Naylor, W. C. Welch, Samuel R. Ringer, George D. Browning, Henry P. Miller, Bert C. Scott, Guy Hinebaugh, and N. C. Sanders.

The Roberts and Ramish Shows, consisting of over 200 people, many of whom are housed in local rooming houses, will furnish the amusement during the four days and nights. Mr. Ramish was the manager for Murphy's Great Shows which were here several years ago when the fair was held on the old Hotel grounds, and which were said to be the best ever appearing here. There will be 5 rides, 9 shows, and 25 concessions. A fireworks display will be given every night.

Admission Price Reduced

The price of admission has been reduced to 25 cents for daytime and 10 cents at night, with season tickets $1. Wednesday, September 21, will be School Day, when a parade will be held and all school children admitted free.

Premium List Same

The premium list will be the same as that of last year with the exception that last year's corn may be entered in competition. This year's corn will not be ready by September 20, it was pointed out.

"We want every department filled this year," Mr. Speicher, manager, said, "and with the cooperation of all the farmers and business men this can be done. Twelve hundred fifty dollars has already been appropriated by the state for the use of this county in undertaking an annual county fair, and there is no reason why the farmers of the county should lose this amount when it is available. A large amount of this sum will be distributed in premiums.

"Crops throughout the entire county are in excellent shape, and stock is looking good. There is no reason why this should not be the largest exhibit of Garrett county products seen in many years."

Mr. Speicher said he was ready to come to anybody's farm at any time to discuss the fair and advise the exhibitors concerning the showing of their animals. This will be the fifteenth annual fair in this county.

Field Inspections for Potato Certification Are Completed

The second and final field inspection for certification bf white potatoes in Garrett county for 1932 has just been completed by Dr. R. A. Jehle, pathology specialist, University of Maryland.

Eight growers with a total of 26.75 acres discontinued inspection and 26 growers with a total of 54.75 acres were disqualified. Of the potatoes eligible for certification, 71.50 acres are rural russets; 28.50 acres smooth rural; Green Mountain, .50; Irish Cobbler, .25.

There will be two bin inspections before potatoes are qualified for certification. All potato growers are asked to keep in mind the Garrett county potato show which will be held the latter part of October, John H. Carter, county agent, has announced. Prizes will be offered in all classes.

Local Red Cross Chapter to Apply for Government Cotton

Cotton cloth totaling 110,000 yards, first conversion of 500,000 bales of government owned cotton, voted by Congress to clothe the needy, was ordered shipped to fifteen cities on Monday by the Red Cross.

None of the cities was in Maryland. The shipments approved included prints, shirting and outing flannels from which Red Cross sewing units and other groups of women volunteers will make children's clothing, men's shirts, women's dresses and underwear.

Applications for the cloth are being received in volumes and will be approved and shipments ordered as rapidly as they can be handled and checked, according to James L. Fieser, Red Cross vice-chairman in charge of the distribution.

The Garrett county chapter of the Red Cross is expecting to make application this week for its share.

Order of the Purple Heart Is Conferred on Oakland Soldier

Several hundred thousand World War veterans who served in the A. E. F., are eligible to the Order of the Purple Heart, an honor badge established by Gen. George Washington for those who fought in the War of the Revolution, under regulations recently announced by the War Department.

The decoration, originally given to a soldier of the Revolutionary War who performed a "singularly meritorious act of extraordinary fidelity or essential service," had not been awarded to veterans in the later wars.

The badge is now being conferred upon those eligibble. In recent days I. R. Rudy, of Oakland, received one of the decorations, along with the lapel bar going with it. The decoration is attractive and on the reverse is engraved the name of the owner and the words "For military merit." The recipient was a member of Co. B, 311th Machine Gun Battalion and was wounded in the leg and neck by shell fragments in the battle before Montfocan.

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD FOR WADE H. HINEBAUGH

Succumbs at University Hospital, Baltimore, Last Saturday

Wade H. Hinebaugh, aged 55 years, son of the late William and Elizabeth Glotfelty Hinebaugh, died at Maryland University Hospital, Baltimore, on Saturday morning at 2:10 o'clock after having been a patient there for three weeks.

Mr. Hinebaugh was prominent in the civic, fraternal and commercial life of the community. He was a merchant and farmer as well as the president of the Board of Election Supervisors of the county, a member of the Lutheran church, the Rotary Club and Knights of Pythias.

As a churchman he occupied a place in the choir for a number of years and was also a member of the official board at various times. He was song leader of the Rotary Club and a member of the Oakland Quartet and led community singing at local gatherings and at other meetings, notably that of the Lutheran Brotherhood. He was engaged as a merchant and a few years ago purchased a small farm near town to which he moved his family and maintained a home.

The announcement of his death was wholly unexpected by his large circle of friends not only in Oakland but in all parts of the county where he was known and held in high esteem for the many noble traits of character which he daily exhibited.

Mr. Hinebaugh is survived by his wife, one son, Morgan Hinebaugh, a Baltimore and Ohio employe in Baltimore; two daughters, Mrs. James Heitz, of Clarksburg, W. Va., and Mrs. Frederick Koch, of Kingwood, W. Va.; also by three brothers and two sisters, Dr. M. C. Hinebaugh, J. O. Hinebaugh and Thaddeus C. Hinebaugh, of Oakland; Mrs. John G. Robinson, also of Oakland, and Mrs. S. E. Boyer, of Fairmont, West Va.

Ralph Robinson, of Baltimore, a nephew of the deceased. Interment was made in Oakland cemetery with members of Oakland Lodge No. 113, Knights of Pythias, conducting the final rites. The pallbearers were J. W. Davis, Charles F. White, Charles W. Ream. John I. Collins, R. O. Winters and Floyd Stahl. The flowerbearers were members of the Knights of Pythias lodge and Oakland Rotary Club.

GIFTS FOR BUILDING THE TABERNACLE

GOLDEN TEXT—Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase.

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 35:4-36:7.

PRIMARY TOPIC — The Meeting Place That Love Built.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Meeting Place That Love Built.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Giving Our Best to God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Giving in Church Life.

I. The Plan of the Tabernacle (Exod. 25-27).

It was a rectangular structure thirty cubits long, ten cubits wide and ten cubits high. It was divided into two rooms: the Holy Place, and the Holy of Holies. These rooms were separsted by the vail. The tabernacle was within a court one hundred cubits long and fifty cubits wide. Within the court, before the door of the tabernacle, was situated the brazen altar; between the altar of sacrifice and the door was the laver; inside the Holy Place the candlestick and table of shewbread; directly in front of the vail the altar of incense which was closely connected with the brazen altar in the contact of fire and blood. In the Holy of Holies was found the Ark of the Covenant, the most sacred object of the entire tahernacle.

II. The Meaning of the Tabernacle (Exod. 28-30).

The tabernacle was the symbol of God's dwelling place. The hond of union affording a medium of communication was the priesthood. The priest was the mediator between God and the people. The tabernacle typified the incarnation of God in Christ (John 1:14). The furniture of the tabernacle, heginaing with the brazen altar, symbolized the spiritual history of the worshiper, making clear the sinner's method of approach unto God. The position of the brazen altar at the door of the tabernacle indicated that no one could draw nigh unto God except by way of that altar. The question of sin must be settled before man dares spproach God. The laver typifies the sanctification of the believer. Sanctification was effected by the washing at the lsver, prefiguring the influences of God's Word. The candlestick with its central shaft and its extending branches indicated the unity and diversity of God's people. The candlestick also shows the purpose of the sanctification of the believer; namely, to shine for God. The table of shewbread was for a memorial unto God of his chosen people, one loaf for each tribe. The altar of incense symbolized communion with God in worship. The putting of the blood from the brazen altar on the altar of incense shows that acceptable prayer rests on the ground of the atoning work of Christ. The vail symbolizes the flesh of Christ. The rending of the vail at the time of Christ's crucifixion shows that the death of Christ gives access to God. The mercy seat upon which the blood of the sin offering was sprinkled indicates that the claim of God's law had been satisfied.

III. The Offerings for the Tabernacle (Exod. 35:20-29).

1. The motive of giving (v. 21, cf. v. 5). "Whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it, an offering of the Lord." Giving which meets God's approval must spring from the heart (II. Cor. 9:7). The offering must not only be made of a willing mind, but it must be as unto the Lord, an expression of love and godly fear.

2. Who had part in giving (v. 22). "They came both men and women." It was God's purpose from the beginning that women should nnite in the support and care of the worship of God.

3. What was to be given (vv. 23-28). Two features characterized the giving: measure and variety.

a. The measure. They brought what they had to bring. No one is under obligation to give that which he does not possess. This is emphasized in such expressions as "every man with whom was found," "all the women who were wise hearted." What one has to give is clearly the measure of one's duty in giving.

b. Variety. They brought jewelry (v. 22), gold (v. 22), fine linen (v. 23), goat's hair and rough skin (v. 23). Wise hearted women would spin with their hands (v. 25). The rulers brought the expensive things that were needed (v. 27).

IV. The Workers Who Constructed the Tabernacle (Exod. 35:29-36:7).

1. Wise hearted women (35:25, 26).

2. Skilled artists (35:30-36:4). Bezaleel and Aholiah, with others, executed this task. Their wisdom and skill were the result of the Spirit of God upon them.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

President Hoover's address accepting the Republican nomination for the Presidency was a logical and convincing recitation of the things which the national administration has done toward counteracting the depression and a lucid and direct statement of the principles for which the President stands and on which he will wage his campaign. Those who have not paused to sum up the efforts which the administration has made to check the depression will be surprised at the number and extent of the constructive steps which have been taken. And on the question of party principles President Hoover shows that he stands squarly on the Republican platform as an advocate of time honored Republican principles. He is for the protective tariff and against a competitive tariff for revenue, which he says will place the American worker and farmer in competition with the poorly paid worker and peasant of Europe. He is opposed to debt cancellation and is unqualifiedly in favor of national defense. His efforts toward limitation of armament and preservation of peace, have been made with our defensive needs in mind, and with the thought that there shall be no interference, in a political way, with our time honored principle of American freedom in international policy without foreign entanglements.

One of the most striking portions of the President's address was thst which pointed out that it has been his aim, in fighting the depression, to sec to it that American principles of indvidual effort and state and local responsibility were not interfered with. In his speech Mr. Hoover said:

"The function of the federal government in these times is to use its reserve powers and its strength for the protection of citizens and local governments by support to our institutions against forces beyond their control. It is not the function of the government to relieve individuals of their responsibilities to their neighbors or to relieve private institutions of their responsibilities to the public, or of local government to the states, or of state governments to the federal government. In giving that protection and that aid the federal government must insist that all of them exert their responsibilities in full. It is vital that by the use of public revenues and public credit in emergency the nation shall be strengthened and not weakened.

"And in all these emergencies and crises and in all our future policies we must also preserve the fundamental principles of our social and economic system. That system is founded upon a conception of ordered freedom. The test of that freedom is that there should be maintained equality of opportunity to every individual so that he may achieve for himself the best to which his character, ability and ambition entitle him. It is only by this release of initiative, this insistence upon individual accomplishment which carry this nation forward."

In this matter of preserving individual liberty of action and state and local responsibility, with federal aid and control only where necessary, we have one of the most distinctive achievements of the national administration in the present crisis. It is well to remember that in these years of depression and economic injury through which we have been passing, American principles of government have remained unaltered. Three-fourths of the people of the globe have changed their government since the world-wide economic breakdown began. There have been revolutions almost everywhere. More men are living under dictatorships now than has been the case for generations. In many instances constitutional provisions have been set aside that the economic and political unity might be preserved. In others, millions of people, as in the case of Russia, are ruled by the authority and desires of one man alone. The regular processes of government have been set aside almost everywhere in order that the nations might save themselves.

But in the United States, where the storms of depression have blown as hard as elsewhere, the American Constitution and the American principles of orderly government and individual freedom have remained unaltered. This is due of course to the grest patience of our people and their love for American institutions and the fact that our government has sought by every means possible to preserve the American ideals which were handed down to us by our forefathers. Here is real patriotism and real achievement of the highest order, far more vital to our people than the rapidly shifting values of securities. These latter csn be restored and will be restored. But the spirit of freedom, once lost, may be gone forever.

MT. LAKE INTERDENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL OF MISSIONS

Held at Mountain Lake Park, Maryland, July 30 to August 5, 1932.

By ALICE PARKER HALL

The Mountain Lake Park Summer School of Missions, held July 30th to August 5th, inclusive, was pronounced by many in attendance the very best ever held at the Park. This was attributed to a number of unusual and very strong features of the program, and the fact that despite the discouraging conditions of the past year in every phase of life, a marked spirit of optimism and a faith in the power of God to overcome difficulties, when His people put their trust in Him, pervaded every session.

The school has not escaped the financial depression, and yet this year brought together one of the strongest faculties ever assembled, and an enrollment of members registered for the entire week almost equal in number to last year. All of the evening sessions were well attended, and the enthusiasm with which the programs were received by the audiences that were composed of not only the members of the school, but many summer residents of the Park, and folks from Oakland and other nearby sections, attested to their appreciation of the splendid programs presented during the week.

The opening session of the school which was held on Saturday evening, took the form of a rally, with an informal program, followed by a reception. The officers and members of the faculty were seated on the platform and as they were introduced by the chairman, Mrs. C. Richard Hall, each one brought a word of greeting or made a short talk. Music, provided by a choir composed of the girls of Camp Gleam, under the direction of Mrs. E. W. Yates, chairman of music, and special solo numbers by Mrs. W. T. Bartholomew and Homer Wainer, with Miss Ellen Jane Grimes as piano accompanist, added much to the pleasure of the evening.

The platform and the front of the auditorium had been transformed into a bower of woodland beauty by the artistic touch of Mrs. E. L. Davidson and her helpers, and from a beautifully decorated table, placed near the platform, a refreshing fruit punch was served by Mrs. Elizabeth Talson, chairman of the courtesy committee, and her aides. Colorful Chinese lanterns provided by Camp Gleam, lighted the way through the grove to the auditorium and contributed greatly to the cheer and festive air of the occasion.

Then during the course of the week as the school progressed, banners, maps pictures of Indian and Chinese life about which we studied, flags of all nations, and many other objects of interest were hung about the auditorium to provide a fitting background and atmosphere for the school. The program chairman, Mrs. F. I. Johnson, presided in her usual animated and efficient manner.

An inspiring and impressive beginning for the sessions of each day were the studies on the subject "The Life of Christ," presented in an earnest and scholarly way by Dr. Donald Ward, pastor of the Central Christian church, of Fairmont. Under the general subject he discussed, in the order given, the following sub-topics: "Jesus' Early Days, and His Mental Makeup," "Basic Elements in Jesus' Teaching," "Jesus Teaching on Privileges and Duties of Men," "The Choice of the Cross," and Jesus and Today.

Dr. Ward also gave a strong and forceful address on "International Relations" on Tuesday evening. He treated the subject from the Christian standpoint, and showed conclusively that the first and surest approach to world peace must be made through world brotherhood and Christian relationships, which he said embrace tolerance, sympathetic understanding, friendliness toward the peoples other nations.

Home and Foreign Mission Study

The study book for Home Missionary Societies this year is "Facing the Future In Indian Missions," and so interesting was it made by our charming teacher, Miss Janet Gilbert, superintendent of Young People's work in the United Brethren church, that we looked forward with eager anticipation from day to day to hear more about these first Americans about which we found we knew comparatively little, when put to the test. This study promises to be one of the most alluring we have had in many years, and if we follow the "trails" outlined for us by Miss Gilbert, we will learn many things about the Indian, and it takes no stretch of the imagination to show what attractive programs and methods may be developed for and by our young people, as they follow the outlines prepared for them.

It was our rare pleasure and privlge to have our Foreign Mission udy, "Lady Fourth Daughter of na," presented to us by its lovely author, Mrs. Mary Brewster Hollister, whose stories and facts were based upon the observations and experiences of a life time spent in China as the daughter of missionary parents, and later as a missionary herself, and then as the wife of a missionary.

She did not confine herself to the text book, but brought to her class many other personal glimpses into the life of China and its peoples in a beautiful and understanding manner.

Story Telling and Visualisation

The story telling periods, conducted each day by Mrs. William W. Grant of Oakland, who is naturally gifted and greatly appreciated, and the visualizations presented by the director of this department, Mrs. Paul B. Naylor, also of Oakland, gave to the classes and the evening audiences many pleasing and impressive examples of how the lessons in the Mission Study might be suplemented and emphasized by the use of stories, playlets, and pageants. Most of these were given in native costumes and settings. Mrs. Naylor was assisted by Mrs. Ralph Weber, who has wonderful ability in characterizing; Mrs. Gordon Mealy, who sang the Indian songs so beautifully; Mrs. D. Edward Offutt, who contributed to the entertainment by rendering several selections; Mrs. James Treacy and Mrs. Donald R. Sincell, piano accompanists, also contributed largely to the musical numbers.

Much credit is due the folks of Oakland who gave so generously of time, talent and effort to make possible the playlets and pageants directed by Mrs. Naylor, which necessarily had to be prepared in advance of the opening of the school. The beautiful pageant, "The Moon for Planting Comes," by Mrs. Hollister, which was presented so effectively on the closing night, received enthusiactic praise.

The District School

The saying that "a little nonsense now and then is enjoyed by the best of men," was given proof when at the Thursday morning session Mrs. Levi B. Harr, of Fairmont, assisted by a large "cast" composed of members of the School of Missions and young people from the Park, put on a very clever and original exercise entitled "The District School," as a demonstration of how facts and fun may be successfully combined in a missionary program.

Mrs. Harr took the part of the school teacher and the costumes of teacher and pupils followed closely the period of thirty years ago. A district school of one room, with pupils of all ages reciting and participating in a closing day "exhibition," brought to light many truths concerning missions and temperance in the clever guise of "readin', writin', and 'rithmetic," and other subjects. For further information, write Mrs. Harr.

Special Speakers and Features

India had a worthy representative in the person of Dr. B. C. Ishwardas, a Christian of that country, who is a graduate of Princeton and attending Columbia University during the past year, and during the summer has been giving addresses and holding forums at summer mission schools and institutes. He appeared several times during the week at both the day and evening sessions, wearing his nativev dress. He gave many intimate and instructive viewpoints from his native land and its peoples, as he has seen and knows them.

The forums on Russia, China and Japan, conducted by Dr. F. I. Johnson, were both timely and informational, and the interest of those present was evidenced in the fact that they seemed loath to leave when he had finished, but remained to ask questions and discuss the conditions that exist in these countries today.

Dr. and Mrs. Johnson have not only made personal visits to these and many other foreign lands, but they are in constant touch with current happenings through missionaries and government bulletins and are therefore prepared to speak authoritatively and understandingly of what is taking place from time to time.

Another speaker who brought a message directly from foreign mission fields was Bishop E. F. Lee, Missionary Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church, who had come to the Park to address the ministers in attendance at the School of Theology, which was being held there. The members of this school united with the School of Missions in order that they might all benefit by what he might say, and they were stirred by the plea he made for greater consecration of life and means to the on going of the Kingdom.

Bishop Lee was warmly welcomed by those who had met him when he appeared on the programs of both schools while in this country four years ago.

Conditions and problems in our own country were not overlooked in planning the program, but two of the most important of these at this time, namely, providing food and clothing for the needy and holding the fort for Prohibition, were given very prominent places in the evening meetings.

It was our very great honor to have as speaker on Monday evening, Judge John Barton Payne, National Executive Chairman of the American Red Cross, who told in a very interesting way of the relief program that is being carried out by the organization of which he is the head. At the close of his address he graciously answered a number of questions relating to the work of distribution, which gave an insight into the workings of this great philanthropic movement, and which Judge Payne is carrying forward at no expense what ever to the organization insofar as he is personally concerned as he draws no salary and furnishes his own stamps and stationery at his own personal expense.

Judge Payne was introduced by Rev. Phillips, of Kingwood, W. Va. He had spent several days previously to coming to the Park visiting among relatives and friends in Taylor and Preston counties, West Va., where he had spent his boyhood days and his early manhood.

The cause of Prohibition, which is so much before the public today, was fearlessly and forcefully espoused by Dr. James A. Crane, Secretary of the Board of Temperance and Social Welfare of the Church of Christ, with headquarters in Philadelphia, who made an address on Sunday night, and Mrs. Johnson, who spoke on the 18th Amendment on Wednesday evening.

Dr. Crane presented many facts to prove the fallacy of the arguments made by the wet forces against Prohibition and to show how greatly the conditions have improved since this protective amendment has been in effect.

Mrs. Johnson told of the tactics resorted to by the wets in the recent political conventions which she attended as vice-chairman of the Women's National Committee for Law Enforcement, of which Mrs. Henry W. Peabody is chairman, and the total disregard for law or government displayed the element that is working for the repeal of the 18th Amendment. Neither speaker minced words, and during the course of their addresses they were applauded many times. Mrs. Johnson, as vice-chairman of Mrs. Peabody's committee, will no doubt prove to be as great a power and influence in the defense of prohibition as she has been for many years in the furtherance of the missionary cause.

The addresses on prohibition were given under the auspices of the department of Temperance and Missions, of which Mrs. Nina M. Hardy, of Morgantown, W. Va., is chairman.

Dr. Harriet B. Jones, of Glendale, W. Va., gave a splendid talk on Christian Citizenship on Tuesday morning in which she stressed the importance of being informed on the duties of citizenship and then making the proper use of this knowledge in working and voting for candidates who will not only enforce the laws but keep them inviolate themselves. She closed with a citizenship drill that was very helpful.

Musical Features

One of the delightful and enjoyable events of the week was a "Community Sing," conducted by Miss Sara B. Huff, of New York, who thoroughly understnds the art of getting folks to sing together. Illustrated song slides were used and the large audience entered into the spirti of the occasion with great zest.

Every evening the girls from Camp Gleam, under the direction of their leader, Miss Anna Shaw, of Baltimore, made up the regular choir, and the vested choirs of the Oakland church, The Nightingales, with their director and accompanist, Mrs. D. Edward Offutt and Mrs. D. R. Sincell, also the St. Cecelia choir, appeared on several programs. Others whose musical numbers added so much to the programs of the week were Mrs. Mealy, of Oakland; Mrs. W. T. Bartholomew, of Mountain Lake Park; Homer Wainer, of Elkins, West Va., and Bond Weber and Mrs. Offutt, of Oakland; Mrs. Wayne Martin, of Uniontown, Pa.; and her sister, Mrs. John L. Parkes, of Spencer, N. C.; Mrs. E. C. Rowand, of Fairmont, W. Va., and Dr. Claude H. Goodwin, of Buckhannon, W. Va.

Mrs. E. W. Yates, as chairman of music, was always on hand to preside at the piano, direct the music, rehearse with the singers or to fit in wherever needed.

As chairman of the school for the past year, I am deeply grateful for the loyal support given me by all of my co-workers and officers, all of whom have been so willing and faithful in the performance of their particular duties. While the school covers just one week, the work of preparation goes on throughout the year.

This report of the School and Camp Gleam is the beginning of the publicity for next year. Funds must be raised by the treasurer, Mrs. B. H. Sincell, and her assistant with which to pay the expenses of the school. Mrs. Johnson, the program chairman, will begin at once to plan her program and engage instructors and talent. Hundreds of letters, posters, leaflets and programs will have to be prepared and sent out during the year and much correspondence will pass between the officers while working out all of the details of the school.

Long in advance, Miss Delia Sherman, literature secretary, of Baltimore, will have to send her orders to the various denominational publishing houses for supplies for the literature, and the counsel and help of the advisory board, which is composed of Mrs. B. H. Sincell, Mrs. E. L. Davidson, Mrs. A. A. Richards and Mrs. Frank E. Baker, will be needed in making preliminary plans for the opening of the school.

Miss Ruth Smith, of Delaware, O., a close friend and companion of Dr. and Mrs. Johnson, who accompanied them to the Park this year, rendered valuable service by making herself generally useful whenever or wherever needed and endeared herself to all who came in contact with her by her happy, cheerful manner.

At the annual business meeting held at the close of the school all of the officers, directors and chairmen who served for the past year were re-elected. Additional ones were Mrs. Robert Powell, of Parkersburg, W. Va., assistant treasurer, and Mrs. F. E. Baker, member of the advisory board. They were as follows:

General Officers—Program chairman, Mrs. F. I. Johnson, New York; local chairman, Mrs. C. Richard Hall, Fairmont, W. Va.; recording and corresponding secretary, Mrs. H. O. Smith, Parkersburg, W. Denominations represented in the school include Baptist, Christian, Lutheran, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Protestant, Presbyterian, Episcopal, Congregational, Southern Methodist and United Brethren.

The activities of Camp Gleam are given in the following report by Miss Sarah Evans, of Fairmont, W. Va., who is director of publicity and a counselor at the Camp:

Camp Gleam

Director of the camp for her third consecutive year, the glowing personality of Miss Anna F. Shaw, of Baltimore, permeated the well-rounded program of activities at Camp Gleam, and her efforts, togther with those of an unusually versatile group of councilors, contributed largely to its overwhelming success.

Here it was that (thirty-nine, I think) girls of teen age and early twenties in attendance at the school lived together for one week and injected into the program already planned for the school a round of enjoyable sports, parties, and outings, culminating in the annual banquet. Here too, through happy comradeship, helpful contacts, and particularly through the medium of intimate little prayer groups which met out under the trees at the conclusion of the evenings meetings, every girl in camp grew to know more intimately a really personal Jesus Christ.

Councilors who assisted Miss Shaw in mothering her flock were Misses Lillian Gore and Ruth Murray, of Baltimore, and Misses Katharine Jones and Martha Jane Eddy, of Fairmont, W. Va., and Miss Janet Gilbert, of Detroit, Mich. Miss Gilbert as one of the instructors, interpreted with remarkable understanding the home missions study book and offered tangible methods for its presentation. As an innovation several periods of religious drama were profitably included in the camp program and with Miss Gore as director were enthusiastically received.

Doubtless the most elaborate function of the week was the banquet, held on the last evening and to which everyone came resplendent in her best bib and tucker, for the guests of honor were faculty members to whom the girls desired to express their appreciation for their contributions to the program's success. Among those gathered there were the scholarly Dr. Ishwardas, of India; charming Mrs. Mary Brewster Hollister, author and popular teacher of the textbook in foreign missions; Mrs. F. I. Johnson, always vivacious and the competent program chairman of the school, and the Rev. Donald C. Ward, whose splendid Biblical lectures had been a source of daily inspiration thruout the week.

For the more timely Washington Bicentennial theme, the annual Rainbow motif of the affair was discarded this year for decorations of red, white and blue. A committee of which Miss Murray was in charge, planned the banquet with extreme care and Mary Wyatt, of Baltimore, made a delightful toastmistress.

And at the banquet, too, an air of expectancy prevailed, for at its conclusion would come the announcement of the names of meritorious creaturcs whose faultless conduct entitled them to a place on the Honor Roll; of winners of camp letters, and most thrilling of all, the girl chosen by her associates as most typical of the "Spirit of Camp Gleam," would be announced. Everyone in camp made the Honor Roll, the majority of the girls received camp letters and Peggy Joachim, of Charleston, W. Va., was elected as the "Spirit of Camp Gleam."

Lack of space forbids a detailed account of many of the week's highlights and only mere mention can be made of the lovely lantern processional through the Park, the traditional trip to beautiful Swallow Falls and the competitive sports events.

Coming as a glorious climax to a week of fun and inspiration was the Candlelight Service on the evening before departure from the Park, when most of the girls audibly and every girl silently and prayerfully reflected upon the true significance of the week together and pledged herself faithfully to "Follow the Gleam."

The community feels deeply the loss of one of its best citizens—Wade H. Hinebaugh. Always pleasant, always helpful, always willing to help make the town and community a better place in which to live; always taking an active part in the several organizations of which he was a part; always the same cheery smile—always himself.

Always will he remain in the hearts of those who knew him.

There will be a final inspection of yards in the near future and all those who are entered in the contest are asked to get their lawns in first class conditlon. TEN THOUSAND WITNESS PAGEANT ON DEEP CREEK

Procession of Many Boats, Led by Father Time, Journey Along Western Shoreline

BOAT RACES ARE HELD

Approximately ten thousand people from various parts of Maryland, Pennsylvania and West Virginia lined the west shore of Deep Creek Lake on Saturday evening to witness the water pageant and musical entertainment held under the auspices of the Mt. Lake Institute.

Led by "Father Time," the procession of approximately 30 decorated boats moved from Rainbow Inn to Cabin Lodge along the western shore, just after dusk. Several spotlights erected through the courtesy of the Associated Gas and Electric company, cast their beams upon the waters, illuminating the boast as they passed the judges stand and paraded before the crowd.

Canoes filled with "Indians" were in the procession while the American Legion, the Red Cross, the Boys' Band, and other organizations had floats. Music from choruses in various boats was heard as the procession wended its way along the western shoreline.

Band, instrumental and vocal music featured the program which was under the direction of Miss Sara B. Huff. During the afternoon, impromptu motor boat, canoe and swimming races were held. Harriett Messmore, Brownsville, Pa., driving the "Louise," won over the "Doris," driven by Buddy Phillips, Uniontown, Pa., in a race of inboard motors from Cabin lodge to the first bridge and return.

Ray Simmons, Cumberland, won over Bill Compton, Bellevue, Pa., in a race of outboard motors, which traveled to the first bridge, making two complete loops, ending at the lodge. Simmons ended 35 yards ahead of Compton.

Former Garrett Countian Retires as Customs Agent

E. E. Enlow, a former Garrett countian, having lived at Hoyes during his younger days, and who has been a United States Customs Agent at San Francisco, Calif., for the past 40 years has been retired under the provisions of the Economy Bill discontinuing the services of superannuated employes.

Mr. Enlow has had about 40 years customs exprience, largely with opium smuggling. The record of number and quantity of seizures of this drug through his efforts is probably unsurpassed, according to Frederick S. Freed, supervising customs agent, who expressed his regret at losing the services of so valuable a man.

In a letter to the Commissioner of Customs at Washington, Mr. Freed stated: "He has developed during his many years' service, a fund of knowledge of opium smuggling and acquaintanceship with Chinese opium smugglers which will probably never be equalled. His custom of visiting Oriental steamers on their arrival for the purpose of scanning Chinese members of their crews, has been productive of having many suspected smugglers discharged on the return of the ships to China. As his superior officer I wish to express my regret that it became necessary to dispense with his services before the last extension period. I feel that the Government is being deprived of a year and a half of irreplaceable experience and service.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

What D'you Mean, Country?

Yesterday morning I called way down to Accident to talk to Henry Speicher. Mrs. Speicher answering the telephone said he wasn't at home—that he was out in the country somewhere. She must have meant "farther out." But a few minutes afterward Henry appeared at my desk. Maybe Mrs. Speicher knew what she was talking about.

We are now looking for a house, preparatory to the big homecoming October 1. We really mean it this time.

I've known for many years that we had road hogs, but it remained for the Cumberland Daily News to designate Route 40 as the National Hoghway, and it did just that Wednesday morning under the news of Frostburg and adjoining towns. Dave Gunter, the News said, was enlarging his service station along the National Hoghway.

That makes Route 37 just a plain old hoghway and likewise all these roads leading into and out of Oakland.

I repeat, we are looking for a home!

* * *

Did you know that Merchant H. C. Sincell has gone in for heathen ideas in a small way? At least he was burning great quantities of incense about his store one morning early this week.

We are still hunting for that house.

When it comes to dressing up like an Indian on hot days, Howl How! but on August evenings, in a canoe, on the lake, wa, wa, or nitchez, nitchez, as Chief Rain-in-the-face used to express his disapproval. We even got a chill before one of the many fires which appeared along the shoreline among the spectators.

But what does that have to do about me? Again let me say, we are looking for a home!

* * *

Are people taking advantage of the free distribution of flour to get it only for the purpose of making biscuits for their dogs, or just so they can trade it for moonshine and then drink the moonshine or sell it for cash?

At any rate, we are hunting for a house.

Some of these days I am going to make a fortune inventing an extra key for a typewriter. I always spell gasolene, gasolecn; Turkesh, Turkash; accessoble, accessable; seporate, seperate, and so on far into the night. The extra key is to strike when you don't know how to spell the word. It would make a blur so that it might be an "a", an "e", "i", "o", or "u," and sometimes "w" and 'y".

* * *

But then I don't have time to invent that now. You see, we are looking for a house.

In fact, you might gather from all this that we are looking for a house. And surely you couldn't expect much else this week. And, really, it might extend into a period of several weeks.

Mrs. C. C. Beachy visited her husband, Mr. C. C. Beachy, who is undergoing treatment at a hospital near Baltimore, a couple of days last week.

Constables Andrew Shartzer and Samuel Cole, of Oakland, were official visiters in this neighborhood one day last week.

MT. LAKE PARK

White Reunion at Loch Lynn Heights

The annual meeting of the White family was held in Hardesty's Grove in Loch Lynn Heights on Sunday, August 21. William White III, aged five months, was the youngest member present.

John Murray White, of near the Park, was the oldest White in attendance, having reached the ripe old age of 93. He walked from his home to the place of reunion, a distance of half a mile, and carried his basket. Mr. White attributes his long life to the fact that he always leaves the table with an appetite.

Johnson White and his wife Asenith were Loch Lynn's first settlers, having established their home here over a hundred years ago. They built a log cabin near the site of what is now the old school building. Ten children were born to this union who settled in and around here, thus the beginning of the White family in this section of Maryland.

Mr. Charles W. Ream, of Crellin, namesake of Charles White, of Cumberland, gave one of his witty short talks. Rev. A. Bailey, pastor of the Baptist church here, also delivered an address, which was interesting. A delightful musical program was rendered. Wilmer Brown played several selection on his accordion and a quartet composed of A. Bailey, W. E. Sims, C. E. Hardesty and Ray Paugh rendered several vocal selections. Jay Bell and John Crane sang a duet. The children of the White family also sang several numbers. William White was present with his string band and played during the day. Althea White, aged three, sang a solo and Mrs. A. Bailey and Mrs. C. E. Hardesty entertained with a duet.

Hoye White, of Grafton, is president of the association; Mrs. J. W. Payton, of Cumberland, is secretary, and Mrs. Alma Bell, of Loch Lynn, is treasurer.

Following a boutiful dinner the entire group joined in singing America.

There will be a taxpayers' meeting at Loch Lynn on Monday evening, August 29, to complete the organization of a league in this district. You are invited to be present.

Mr. Harned's Lecture

We want to put special stress on the announcement that Mr. J. E. Harned has kindly consented to deliver a lecture, accompanied by colored slides, next Saturday evening in the old auditorium, on wild Flowers. This should be of great interest to all of us, not only from an aesthetic standpoint, but from the standpoint of practical knowledge to be gained by hearing a man who is recognized as an authority in his line of endeavor and whose standing as a botanist is proclaimed by leading scientists. His book, "Wild Flowers of the Alleghanies," is having a wide sale among schools and libraries, as well as to those specially engaged in scientific botanical studies. Mr. Harned approaches his subject from an unusual angle which coupled with his very apparent love of nature, make his talks extremely interesting.

Celebrates 84th Birthday

There was another delightful time last Sunday at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Rowan in Loch Lynn where many relatives and friends gathered to do homage in honor of the 84th birthday of Mrs. J. W. Moon. Children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren were present from Deer Park, Oakland, Kitzmiller, Romney, Clarksburg, Morgantown, Maidsville, Uniontown and Detroit. Music was furnished by the Brown family of Loch Lynn. Mrs. Moon is in excellent health and was active and took a great interest in the day's entertainment.

The Octogenarians

As we listened to the program last Sunday, especially in relation to the Octogenarians, we wondered how many of us will be present at a like gathering when we shall have been "singing the song of life for eighty years or more," and of that number how many will carry the burden of years so lightly and so well as they, retaining the zest of life and interest in affairs. While "a thousand years in Thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night," yet, when measured by human experience, 80 years is a long time to have lived. In that time much water passes over the dam.

When these Octogenarians were born Millard Fillmore was President of the United States; the death of Clay and Webster had just occurred; Uncle Tom's Cabin had just been published. They have watched the development of many wonders of the scientific world, the passing of many friends to the wonderful Isle of Somewhere, have experienced laughter and tears, joys and sorrows, and no doubt now realize that soon (we hope it may be long) they will "pass, without trembings through those gloomy mansions where all things are forgotten, and that great and tremendous day, when arraigned at the bar of Divine Justice, judgment shall be pronounced in their favor, they shall receive the reward of their labor and virtue and acquire the possession of an immortal inheritance where joy flows in one continued stream and no mound can check its course."

In the Park M. E. church services on Sunday as follows: Church school at 10 a. m.; morning worship at 11 o'clock and evening service at 7:30.

Personal Mention

The last sermon of this conference year will be preached by the pastor, Rev. J. A. Jessee, in the U. B. church next Sunday evening.

Dr. Fincher, of Cumberland, former U. B. pastor here, is a guest of friends in Loch Lynn.

Word has been received that E. O. Fouch, now a patient in the Cumberland Hospital, where he underwent a major operation, is rapidly recovering and will soon be home.

Dr. C. W. Baldwin, of Baltimore, is a guest in the Park for a few days.

Dr. and Mrs. Rasmussen, of Washington, D. C., are guests at the Rodeheaver cottage in the Park. Dr. Rasmussen is pastor of the Luther Memorial church in Washington and came here to stay three or four days but he has found such pleasure and beauty in the hills of Garrett that his stay has been lengthened to two weeks and may be continued indefinitely.

Miss S. Scollay Page, city librarian of Clarksburg, W. Va., Mrs. Arthur Wessel, Mrs. Camilla Monroe and Mr. Arthur Wessel, Jr., of Pittsburgh, were recent house guests of Mrs. F. Morgan.

Murder Suspects Caught.

A great deal of excitement was in evidence in this community last Friday and Saturday, caused by the arrival of two Negroes pursued by officers from the LaVale sub-station of the Maryland State police. It was supposed that the men are the same pair that held up the Tasty Pastry shop in Frostburg and also murdered a Germantown (Md.) grocer, Horace D. Waters.

They succeeded in evading the officers by hiding in various buildings and alleys and later escaped into Pennsylvania. They were apprehended by the Meyersdale police on Saturday.

After being turned over to the officers of Maryland they were freed of any connection with the robbery of the Frostburg bake shop, but were taken to Montgomery county by Rockville police to be questioned in connection with the murder of Mr. Waters.

Casselman Bridge Near Grantsville to be Eliminated from Main Route of Highway

The famous Casselman River bridge on the National Highway near the town of Grantsville, which was erected in 1818, is soon to be abandoned and will be replaced by a steel bridge which will be erected over the Casselman River at a point where the road is being straightened for the purpose of eliminating dangerous curves.

This bridge, which was built to endure for centuries, is another casualty in the onward sweep of progress. The State Roads Commission found it necessary to change the course of the road east of Grantsville and the section of which the bridge is a part had to be eliminated to carry out the plan for a better and safer route.

When the new road is completed the historic old bridge will be in view of passing motorists and will be kept in good condition as one of the historic treasures of this section. The new route on the National Highway from Grantsville will pass over the Ross property, where a miniature golf course was formerly located, passing in the rear of the Dixie Tavern, and thence in a straight line to the entrance of Grantsville, beautifully located on the hill above the river, and said to be one of the best kept towns along the highway.

This is but one section of the National Highway in Garrett county which has been improved by the elimination of dangerous curves which were considered unsafe for modern traffic.

Yesterday Was Hottest Day of Year Thus Far

The hottest day of the year was reached yesterday when the government thermometer at Weber's registered 90 degrees, at noon. The hottest day previous to that was on August 30, when it registered 87. It had reached 86 degrees several times this summer. With the temperature already at 88 degrees at 11 o'clock this morning, indications are that today's mark will reach above 90.

Rainfall for August was 2.80 inches.

Smoothest Road In State

Garrett county boasts of the smoothest state road in the State. The Swanton road which has just been completed was inspected by the testing engineer on August 30 and the result was a test of 14, which is 5.4 better than any other state road in the State. Credit ls due to the Garrett County Inspectors, W. H. Stevens and R. W. Sheckells.

The Knights of Pythias have made this event a creditable one by devoting to it a great deal of time and expense, and we hope that a great number of people will be there."

People Pause to Watch Eclipse of Sun Yesterday

The Sun and its Lunar playmate caused people throughout Oakland and Garrett county yesterday to pause in their work and gaze through smoked glasses at the phenomena which happens at intervals few and far between. Along the streets and from out of windows could be seen those who watched the progress of the shadow.

The eclipse began about 2:30 and reached its height about 3:30 when more than 80 percent of the sun was covered. A peculiar haze hung over the landscape as the rays were practically obscured.

Breaks Record Making Good Personal Bond

Promptness in making good a personal bond, which he said was unequalled in the history of West Virginia was reported by William S. Johnson, treasurer of West Virginia. A personal bond to protect more than $5,000 of state funds that had been deposited in the Bayard National bank at Bayard, he said, had been signed by two persons, M. Tamburini and David Aaronohlt.

The bank failed recently and the state treasurer requested the sheriff to serve papers on the two bondsmen. Tamburini, he said, sat down at once and wrote out a check. Aaronholt's check was received a day or two later.

Treasurer Johnson said he usually has to wait some time before he can obtain the money on personal bonds.

PROPOSED CONSTITUTION LINKS COUNTRY WITH CITY

New Set-Up Would Definitely Place Tableland Products Within Pittsburgh Markets

ANNUAL MEETING OCT. 11

A new constitution for the Allegheny Tableland association, definitely linking it with the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, and creating community units among the Tableland towns and organizations, was tentatively adopted at the concluding session of the rural-urban conference at Mt. Lake Park last Saturday morning.

The new constitution is to be carried to organizations throughout the Tableland, there discussed, and their delegates instructed as to final adoption at the annual meeting of the Tableland association to be held on Tuesday, October 11, at a place to be designated by James B. Watson, president. The new constitution was presented by Joseph T. Miller, chairman of the Allegheny Tableland council of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce.

Call For Joint Board

The proposed constitution calls for a board of nine directors elected at an assembly meeting of the Tableland association, and a board of nine from the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, plus a chairman and two vice-chairmen, to constitute a joint board of promotion and control.

Dues are to be discontinued and funds raised through quotas from each community unit.

Reitell Speaks

Pointing out that any regional association was bound to fail without the first cardinal principal of becoming "regional conscious," Dr. Charles Reitell, director of Greater Pennsylvania council, urged those interested at the public meeting Friday night to begin thinking in terms of regions, and forget towns, counties, and even states.

He urged every newspaper editor of the Tableland to meet to lay out a program over a two-year period emphasizing the necessity of unified cooperation. "We need leadership with facts, coupled with a scientific knowledge to carry out the proposed plan of mutual helpfulness," Dr. Reitell said.

He advocated a tourist survey and market survey, and a survey of the scenic wonders of the tableland, so as to make this region a terminal instead of a by-station for tourists. "Lastly, we need fineness and an intelligence of spirit to carry out the program."

Extensions to Cooperate

Dr. T. B. Symons, C. C. McDowell, and Nat T. Frame, extension director of Maryland, Pennsylvania and West Virginia, respectively, each pledged cooperation in short talks.

Resolutions from the regional group which met last Friday afternoon under Pressley H. Bailey, urged reciprocity in fish and game licenses for three states, while the wholesale group under W. P. Benson, pledged the interest of the Pittsburghers in using tableland potatoes, buckwheat, maple syrup and other products, the local Tablelanders promising to present their products attractively packaged.

A plant for manufacturing self-rising buckwheat flour was considered.

Lesson for September 4

EVILS OF INTEMPERANCE

GOLDEN TEXT—Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations.

LESSON TEXT—Isaiah 5.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Evil of Drunkenness.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Wise Man Gives a Warning.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Obey the Law?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Observing and Enforcing Law.

I. Israel, the Favored Nation (vv. 1-7).

This nation's unique relation to God is presented nnder the figure of a vineyard. Obscrve:

1. God's peculiar favor (vv. 1, 2). God did for this nation what he did for no other nation in the history of the world. He fenced it when he assigned the boundaries of Israel's inheritance. (Num. 34:1-13.) He gathered out the stones when the Canaanites were exterminated. The choicest vine planted therein was the Israelitish nation which had gone through the disciplinary process in Egyptian bondage. He built a tower in it when under David Jerusalem was made its capital city.

2. The obligation of the nation (v. 2). The purpose of a vineyard is to bring forth grapes. The purpose of God in selecting nnd blessing the Israelitish nation was that it might bring forth fruit to his glory.

3. It bore only wild grapes (v. 4). Instead of sweet, luscious grapes, they bore grapes of n sour and unwholesome kind. How aptly this symbolizes Israel's life!

4. The desolation of the vineyard (vv. 5-7). Since all efforts had been wasted, the owner of the vineyard now resolved to nbandon it. He purposed to take nway the fences and leave it exposed to wild beasts, to be wasted and devoured by them.

II. The Sins Which Brought Ruin to Israel (vv. 8-23).

The causes of this destruction are presented under six woes, each woe pronounced against a particular sin:

1. Monopoly and oppression of the poor (vv. 8-10). The crime against which the first woe is directed is that of avaricious grasping after property which lends to the accumulation of wealth in the hands of the few. "Joining house to house nnd laying field to field" means the sin of the greedy monopolist who buys up the land on every side and ejects the small land holder. In the agricultural district it takes the form of the "land grabber." In the commercial centers it takes the form of the big man crushing out the smnll ones. This state of affnirs met God's judgment in Judea, as seen in vv. 9 and 10, and one day it shall do likewise in America.

2. Dissipation (vv. 11-17). The sin here denounced is drunkenness. Several fentures nre connected with this one sin:

a. Drinking made the life business of some (v. 11). They got up carly and continued until late at night.

b. The effort to give their wicked business a show of refinement (v. 12). This is why pleasing music is heard in dens of infamy over our land.

c. Blindness to God's wnrnings and judgments (v. 12). Their drinking and dissipntion rendered them insensible to the dealings of Providence.

d. God's judgments for such sin (vv. 13-17). They went into captivity. The immediate cause nssigned was ignorance, but it was a willful ignorance for which they were held responsible. There was a grent mortality among those who drank (v. 14). "Hell hath enlarged herself." The records everywhere show a mnch higher death rate among drinking men. Drinking degrades all classes (v. 15).

3. Unbelief (vv. 18, 19). This woe is directed agninst the sinner who presumptuously plunges into vice. He persists in iniquity nnd scoffs at judgment. This is peculiarly common among those who go nhout wine-drinking as a husiness.

4. Moral confusion (v. 20). This woe is pronounced against those who try to ndjust moral conditions to suit their sinful appetites.

5. Conceit (v. 21). The fifth woe is pronounced against the sin of self-conceit, which holds a false estimate of human wisdom and acts without reference to God.

6. Perversion of justice (vv. 22, 23). The sixth woe is pronounced against unjust judges.

III. God's Treatment of Israel for Their Sins (vv. 24-30).

1. He stretched out his hand in anger against them (vv. 24, 25).

2. Chastised by the nations (vv. 26-30). God gave the signal and issued the call for the nations to chastise Israel.

This morning when I came to work some malicious spider, with a dastardly plot in back of his head, had woven a web from the back of my chair to that of the Boss Editor, trying to make it appear that neither one of us had been working for some time. Had it been from my chair to any other one in the office, the Boss Editor would have believed the spider, but he couldn't since it was hooked to his own chair. I am inclined to believe the spider got mixed up in his seats. Just for that I won't feed him any more flies that I capture. And then, what will he do when winter comes?

Dear Scoop: I am going to get married next month. Don't you think my friends ought to give me a shower?

Answer: Sure, if you need one. I'll be your friend and bring the towel.

Dear Scoop: I have just taken a telephone operator for my bride. I never expect to have a cross word with her, and we will always be two little love birds. Won't that be nice?

Answer: You have the wrong number.

Wrong Office

"The way I see it," says Col. Bell, "is that the candidate who offends the ears the least is going to get elected. The people are awfully tired of campaign speeches. Down where I live a man walked into the sheriff's office and said he had come to give himself up. The sheriff wanted to know what for. The man explained that he was over at the lodge hall where a candidate for the legislature spoke for an hour and then spoke for another hour.

"'And then,' said the man, 'I just up and shot him dead.'

"'Wrong office,' snapped the sheriff. 'The bounty clerk is on the next floor.'"

Make it Roses and Pansies

Bury me 'neath the shade of the old apple tree. Not many have the advantage of writing their own obituary, but here's mine that could be used:

The grim reaper of death chose as his victim this week Scoop Himself, aged from 27 years, 6 months, 15 days, 4 hours, 31 minutes and 89 seconds, to 110.

In the spring of life a leaf has fallen from its place in the human forest. Must have been something wrong with the tree, or else it was the leaf's own fault. Anyway, here I lie.

In early life he chose that good part which was unable to be taken from him by joining the Presbyterian church. It couldn't be taken away even after he joined the Lutheran church. His gentle disposition reminded us of the brindle cow, except in moments of distemper which were quite frequent.

He was ever willing to lend a helping hand to a neighbor, provided the neighbor returned it in good shape within ninety days, with interest at 6 percent. It can be truly said he was a friend in need—in fact the relief agencies finally refused him any more.

He was a member of the church council, but on the other hand he played Sunday baseball. It's a question as to which place he is going, but we can be sure that he has left here, for which we rejoice.

Born—yes. Died, also yes. The Republican office is declared the winner. Burial services were gladly conducted by the Amalgamated society for the Prevention of Work.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH CALLS TEETH MILLSTONES

Function in Performing Their Task of Grinding Food

Comparing the teeth to millstones, Dr. Richard C. Leonard, Chief of the Division of Oral Hygiene of the Maryland State Department of Health, said: "Whether the teeth—often called the 'millstones' of the body—function satisfactorily as the food we eat, or whether they become like the proverbial 'millstones about our necks,' constant sources of annoyance, depends upon three main factors. 1. Structural strength—resistance to wear and decay. 2. Constant supervision—correction of defects. 3. Scrupulous cleanliness.

"Our teeth resemble millstones in depending upon their structural strength to perform their task of grinding food. In the actual mill only those stones that have a definite resistance to wear and destruction can be used as grinders of grain. Teeth must have similar qualities of strength and resistance to decay. In both sorts of millstones, structural strength depends especially upon the elements that go into their make-up. The framework of our teeth is composed largely of calcium and phosphorus salts. Their resistance to wear and tear depends to a considerable degree upon whether the diet of the expectant mother and of the growing child has been sufficiently rich in the mineral salts and vitamins that give this quality to the teeth. These necessary elements are found in all dairy products, in the green leafy vegetables and in certain fruits, especially oranges and tomatoes.

"In selecting stones for a mill, great care has to be taken to be sure they are free from imperfections Equal care has to be taken to see that the teeth are free from defects. The teeth are not always perfect as they grow out from the gum. Sometimes they are pitted with tiny crevices that will deepen or extend if not attended to promptly. This can be done easily, painlessly and permanently, by a competent dentist.

"As to our third factor—mouth cleanliness. Dirty millstones are unsatisfactory as grinders of grain. They must be kept clean if they are to perform their tasks properly. So must the teeth. People who would refuse to use flour ground between dirty millstones, in a filthy mill, should realize that that is what happens when food is taken into a dirty mouth to be chewed by corroded or decayed 'grinders.' Teeth that are not clean, are not only a menace to health but an affront to common decency. Scrupulous cleanliness calls for a thorough brushing of the teeth, morning and night.

"Beginning when they are two or three years old, children should be taken to a dentist for a thorough dental examination and the necessary correctional treatment. From then on, a child should be taken to the family dentist at least twice a year; oftener if the dentist advises it."

In Commemoration of Great Historic Events

Although the Dutch laid claim to the Hudson River region in 1609 and built n fort in 1613, some of the earliest, if not the very first, settlers were fugitives from religious persecutions in France and Flanders, who obtained permission from the Dutch to make their homes in New Netherlands.

In 1924, as part of the observance of the tercentenary of their arrival, the United States issued the special coin and also large-sized special postage stamps of the denominations of 1, 2 nnd 5 cents. All of these are now prized nnd worth more than their face value when in fine condition.

On vnrious appropriate occasions the government issues such commemorative coins. Some other special issues were called forth by the commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the discovery of the Hawaiian Islands in 1928; the sesqui-centennial in 1926; commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Bennington nnd Independence of Vermont, in 1927; of the bnttles of Lexington and Concord in 1925; the Monroe Doctrine centennial in 1923; the Grant centennial in 1922; the Alabama and Missouri centennials in 1921, and the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims in 1920.

Heron Apparently One of Nature's Favorites

The heron possesses a secret which would be boon to women who like to eat, but stand in fear of the surplus poundage overeating brings. The bird is an incessant feeder, but no matter how it gorges, it never seems to become overplump. It usually stands motionless in the water until its food obligingly comes within rnnge and then with a swift dart of its long, strong bill, it snatches its prey from the water. Its favorite food is fish or frogs, but it will eat insects, meadow mice or most anything else in the fish or meat line.

The heron is much more common in South America than in North America, but such types as are found in this country nre fairly widespread. The blue heron, usually called the crane in error, is the most common type. It usually nests in high trees in inaccessible spots in a swamp.

Loose Language

Recently a public speaker preparing to make an accusation nbout something of which he was ignorant began with the statement: "I venture the nssertion." There is a phrase contradictory in its very make-up. An assertion is a positive affirmation. It is not a suggestion, a probability, a possibility or remote contingency; so it is not a venture into the realms of doubt—a mere personal and prejudiced opinion. Yet whenever one "ventures the assertion" he is getting ready, nine times out of ten, to make a wild and unfair speculation. He is merely expressing an unsupported opinion in a noncommittal way. It is a funny phrase, nnd it ought to be abolished for incompetency.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Earth's Chemicals

The number of so-called chemical elements which enter into the earth's composition is more than eighty, bnt few of these figure as important constituents of the portion known to us. Nearly one-half of the mass of this shell is oxygen and more than a quarter is silicon. The remaining quarter is made up largely of aluminum, iron, calcium, magnesium and the alkalies sodium and potassium, in the order named. These eight constituent elements are the only ones that are important parts of the earth's surface shell. They are not found in the free condition, but combined in proportions chnracteristic of chemical compounds, and are known as minerals.

Excelsior Production

It is estimated that one cord of excelsior wood will yield an average of 2,000 pounds of excelsior. However, this often varies from 1,650 to 2,300 pounds per cord. The various species of nspen and cottonwood, together with basswood, constitute considerably more than half of all the excelsior produced in this country. Other species used in excelsior manufacture in this country are the varions southern pines, willow, red gum, white pine, spruce nnd small quantities of a considerable number of other woods.

In a Fix

He was leaning over the desk with his head in his hands.

"What's the trouble?" asked his fellow college student.

"I'm in a bit of a hole," he replied gravely.

"Oh!" exclaimed his companion. "What's wrong?"

The harassed youth shrugged his shoulders.

"I've spelled professor with two 'f's' and I don't know which one to cross out."

Waterfalls of Norway

Norway, famous for its rugged scenery, is a land of innumerable waterfalls. The Voringfos falls, on the Bjoreia, and the Skjeggedalfos, on the Tyassa, both are well over 500 feet in height. On the Markedola, in the region of the Sogne fjord, is the Vettisfos falls, with a drop of 850 feet. The Seven Sisters falls, are located on one of the branches of the Storfjord. There are seven separate falls in this natural wonder.

PARENTS ASKED TO HAVE VACCINE GIVEN CHILDREN

State Law Requires Those Entering School to be Protected

Parents of children who will enter school this fall are reminded by Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the State Department of Health, of the Maryland law which requires all children to be vaccinated against smallpox before they can be accepted in any school in the State.

"The family physician is expeeted to vaccinate every baby and young child under his care," Dr. Riley said, "and the parents should see that it is done. The earlier it is attended to the better it is for the child.

"Until a child enters school," Dr. Riley continued, "the responsibility for having him or her protected against smallpox, rests with the parents. After that it is shared by the teachers. In accordance with the Maryland vaccination law, any teacher who permits the enrollment of an unvaccinated child, or children, is liable to a fine of ten dollars for each and every offense.

"Smallpox is comparatively rare in Maryland, but unvaccinated people in Maryland are just as susceptible to the disease and just as likely to get it, if exposed to it, as unvaccinated persons are in other communities. We owe our comparative freedom from the disease to the willing, intelligent cooperation of parents, doctors and teachers with State, county and city departments of health in carrying out the provisions of the Maryland vaccination law, in seeing that children are vaccinated either in infancy or before they reach school age.

"Sometimes it is necessary for us to notice what is happening in other parts of the country in order that we may realize what would occur in Maryland if our people were not protected against smallpox. The disease is much more common than most people realize. It is prevalent at all times and in all parts of the world. A recent report from the U. S. Public Health Service shows that 482 cases were reported in the United States alone, during the four weeks ending on July 15, and that many more cases were reported from other parts of the world. Thirty-two states were represented in these 482 cases. I am glad to be able to say that Maryland was not among them. We have had only one case of smallpox in the State in two years, and only 40 in five years—9 in 1927; 22 In 1928; 8 in 1929; none in 1930; one in 1931 and none since then. Smallpox is preventable, as our record shows. In many of the counties parents are inclined to wait until just before school opens to have their children vaccinated. The fall and winter term will begin in a few days and children who have not been vaccinated should be taken to their family doctors, without further delay, and protected against this entirely preventable disease."

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

In the late nineties a lethargy came over the Society. Donations dropped to an average of $3,500 per year and distribution dropped to about 15,000 volumes. Such variations belong to life, and register in everything from the rise and fall of the tide, the waxing and waning of the moon, the systole and diastole of the heart, to prosperity and depression in business.

One happy event occurred at this time in the election of Dr. Bernard C. Steiner as recording secretary of the society, an office which he held by annual election until 1915. His monumental labor in this field was the preparation and publication of the brochure, "One Hundred and Ten Years of Bible Society Work in Maryland, 1810-1920." This little volume is a compendium of all important happenings within the Society, so far as records are available, for the entire period of its existence. The booklet is a veritable mine of valuable information, and is practically the only source book of the Society for this long period of its life.

The writer of these articles was driving down the York Road on the evening of February 7th, 1904, when he observed the sky line above the City of Baltimore illumniated to a most unusual degree of brightness. As he drew near Texas, his destination for the evening, sparks and great bursts of flame were clearly discernible, as the fierce winter wind lashed the flames into fury. Baltimore was burning, and with it the Bible House. Mr. Cross at once rose to the emergency. Temporary quarters were secured in the Young Men's Christian Association building at the corner of Charles and Saratoga streets, while the board of managers met at Mr. Cross's law office at 10 East Lexington street. The Charles street site was sold, additional ground was secured on East Fayette street and the second Bible House was erected on the site of the first one, and was ready for occupancy in August, 1905. Thus did Baltimore rise like the Phoenix from her ashes.

In spite of difficulties requiring almost superhuman effort, 14,635 volumes were distributed in 1903-4, and $500 sent to the American Bible Society, while in 1904-5, while the city lay in ruins, 12,652 volumes were distributed and a contribution of $1,000 made to the National Society. For the purchase of the additional lot $6,679 was paid, and the sale of the Charles street lot brought $29,802. A mortgage was placed upon the building, which was paid off in four years. On August 27, 1909, Mr. Cross died suddenly. He had been a member of the board since 1872, and the Society properly bore testimony to his "high Christian character and his love for the inspired Word of God, together with his marked administrative ability and tact in dealing with difficult situations."

Graded Farm Products Benefit All Concerned

Selling farm products on the basis of grades and the use of inspection is a benefit to all parties concerned—producer, distributor, and the people who buy and eat the food, according to Stewart B. Shaw, chief of the Maryland State Department of Markets. When products are sold this way, he says, the man who produces high-quality is paid accordingly.

For a number of years, Mr. Shaw states, a Federal-State inspection service has been offered growers of farm products in Maryland, and thousands of carloads pass under the eyes of these trained, unbiased inspectors each year. Among the products he mentions as having been inspected are apples, peaches, pears, strawberries, potatoes, cucumbers, eggs, and maple syrup.

Last year for the first time, Mr. Shaw says, this inspection service was used by a number of packers in buying tomatoes for canning.

Holly Trees From Cuttings

By W. R. Ballard, Extension Horticulturist

It is a well known fact that some holly trees do not produce berries and since the scarlet colored fruits are the attractive feature of this broad-leaved evergreen, attempts to propogate the berried forms by cuttings are of general interest. Experimental results have been successful and nurserymen are beginning to try out this method on a commercial scale.

Cuttings of the current season's growth five or six inches long are made preferably in August or early September. Two or more leaves should be left on the cuttings and they should be set on a slant so that the leaves will be near the surface of the bed. Close contact with the soil helps to prevent wilting of the foliage. If green foliage can be retained on the cutting it will almost certainly root sooner or later.

Equal parts of sand and peat moss make the best rooting medium although leaf mold can be used for the peat moss when it is not available. A cold frame with a lath screen is about the best place for rooting the cuttings although upon the approach of freezing weather it is desirable to cover the frame with glass sash.

Under ideal conditions roots will begin to form in about twenty-one days. New shoots develop generally only after cuttings have been exposed to a period of low temperatures. Cuttings should be left in the frame for about a year before being tranplanted to especially prepared beds and they should be secured from the finest berried trees available.

SUMMER DESERTS—ESPECIALLY FRUIT

Peach Tapioca

One-fourth cup quick cooking tapioca, 1 pint hot water, 1 cup sugar, 1 tablespoon butter, ½ teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1 cup peach juice, 2 cups sliced, canned peaches.

Cook the tapioca and water in a double boiler for 15 minutes. Add the sugar, butter, salt and lemon juice, which has been drained from the peaches. In a greased baking dish, make alternate layers of the tapioca and peaches arranged so that a layer of the peaches comes on top. Bake in a moderate oven for about 30 minutes, or until brown on top. Serve either hot or cold.

Grape Pie

Five cups Concord grapes, 1 cup of sugar, 2 tablespoons cornstarch, ⅛ teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, pastry.

Pull the grapes from the stems. Slip off the skins, and keep them separate from the pulp. Heat the juice and pulp for about five minute. Then rub the pulp through a sieve to remove the seeds. Combine the sugar, cornstarch, and salt, mix with the grape pulp, and cook for about 10 minutes, stirring constantly. Then add the grape skins and lemon juice, and pour the fruit filling into a pie pan lined with pastry. Cover the top with strips of pastry, and bake in a hot oven for about 30 minutes.

Lemon Sherbet

Two cups milk and 1 cup cream, or 3 cups rich milk, 1¼ cups sugar, 1 cup lemon juice, ½ cup water, ¼ teaspoon salt.

Heat 1 cup of the milk, add the sugar, stir until the sugar is dissolved, and add the other ingredients. Use a freezing mixture of 1 part of salt and 4 to 6 parts of ice, and turn the crank of the freezer slowly. After freezing, remove the dasher, pack the freezer with more ice and salt, and let the sherbet stand for an hour or more to ripen the flavor.

Baked Pears

Wash the pears, cut in half, core, and place in a baking dish. Sprinkle with sugar and a little salt, dot with butter, add very little water, cover, and bake in a moderate oven. As soon as the friut becomes soft, remove the cover so that the sirup will cook down. Serve hot or cold with or without cream.

Try These Out on Your Toddler

Food habits are established early. It is well to form good ones. The following points will help your child to health:

Set a time for meals and allow no interruptions during the meal hour.

Have the food attractive in color, odor and flavor so that it will tempt the appetite.

Serve small portions so that the child can clear his plate without the feeling of being stuffed.

Take it for granted that he will eat happily everything served him and be sure that he becomes acquainted with a variety of foods.

Let him feed himself and experience the joy of self-help.

Refrain absolutely from discussing the child's eating habits with others in his presence.

Begin today. The training or the retraining in food habits is too important to wait until tomorrow.

Be sure that he has the following each day: One quart of milk, whole grain cereal, tomato or orange juice, some vegetable, cod liver oil and water to drink.

WASHINGTON LIKED TITLE "FARMER"

Those who have read bits of Washington's diary will need no convincing that the Father of His Country liked the simple, rural life. But further evidence of this fact will be found in an interesting article in the current issue of the National Republic by Albert R. Beatty, entitled, "George Washington—Farmer." In this story Mr. Beatty shows that our first President was never happier than when engaged in agricultural pursuits and that he liked the titlt "farmer." In part the writer says:

"Of the numerous titles that were prefixed to the name of George Washington suddenly found himself master ous career, none was as pleasing to him as that of 'farmer.' Never was he happier than when he was at Mount Vernon engaged in agricultural pursuits and, as a visitor to his estate in 1785 said of him, 'His greatest pride is to be thought the first farmer in America.'

"When, at the age of twenty, Washington suddenly found himself masteh of Mount Vernon and its vast farm lands, there were no county agricultural agents with whom he could consult; no magazines nor journals in this country devoted to husbandry from which he could obtain practical information or write for advice, and no agricultural colleges nor government experiment stations to offer a helping hand. He was on his own, as it were, and he was equal to the task.

"Fortunately, as a youth, he had lived on a farm, and had obtained a thorough knowledge of the planters' methods that were then in vogue. He had made a number of trips to Mount Vernon while it was in the hands of his half-brother Lawrence and, during these visits he had become acquainted with every foot of its fields and meadows.

"From the very start the young and industrious Washington assumed personal supervision of his estate which he geographically divided into five tracts: The Mansion House farm; River Farm; Union Farm; Muddy Hole Farm, and Dogue Run Farm. Over each of these was placed an overseer, with a general manager at the head who was responsible only to Washington and to whom he weekly rendered a report. Statistics and other necessary data from these statements were painstakingly copied in journal and account books by the General. No detail was beneath his notice, as is evidenced by the copious notations which he made almost daily in his diaries.

"Although Washington was absent from Mount Vernon about half of the time in the service of his country, he kept a watchful eye on what was going on at home and continued to receive a weekly accounting.

"To these reports the General would make lengthy replies. They gave instructions on the care of the cattle, sowing, eultivation and harvesting of the crops, the making of repairs to buildings and farm machinery, the purchase of new implements and the comfort and discipline of the 317 negroes and many whites in his employ.

"While in Mount Vernon, rarely a day passed that did not find Washington in the saddle making a tour of inspection of his plantations. It was his eustom to rise before the sun, visit his stables and, after partaking of a temperate breakfast, leave for a ride about his extensive domain, often covering a distance of as many as fifteen miles. He would stop and talk with his overseers, offer innumerable suggestions and discuss plans for the future. Promptly at a quarter of three in the afternoon he would return.

"Washington was doubtless the first scientific farmer in America. Early did he see the wisdom of the rotation of crops for which he prepared elaborate tables, the inadvisability of centering his agricultural activities on the production of tobacco, the ruinous effects of the Virginia system, and the untold benefits of practical expermentation, which he carried on to a great extent. Much of his knowledge of farming he obtained from imported books and from correspondence with the justly celebrated Arthur Young and Sir John Sinclair, as well as from first hand observation during his travels."

MIXING THE ROOSEVELTS

A few days ago Paul Bellamy, of Rapid City, S. Dakota, president of the Black Hills Transportation company, related an interesting experience. He was riding on a train and fell into conversation with a man who told him he was going to vote for Franklin D. Roosevelt, that he would "like to see a son of T. R. in the White House." When Mr. Bellamy told the man Franklin D. was not a son of T. R., but only a remote relative, he refused to belive him. The incident impressed Mr. Bellamy so strongly that he made a canvass of the passengers in his car and found that more than half of the men and women in it believed that the Democratic nominee is a son of Theodore Roosevelt! What irony it is that the name of a great Republican leader should become a menacing Republican liability!

DOMESTIC ISSUES FIRST

In emphasizing domestic issues and outlining what has been done and what he plans to do in the nation-wide effort to shorten the depression, there is little doubt that President Hoover's statement of domestic affairs as contained in his formal acceptance address meets with the hearty approval of the great bulk of the American people regardless of their political affiliations.

President Hoover, on international affairs, reiterated his support of time-honored American principles of international cooperation without involving the United States in any foreign alliances or obligations, political or otherwise. In this, too, the American people will agree. But the President properly devoted the greater part of his address to the discussion of American economic issues. It is in the United States that we have to live, and it will be the American people who will pull themselves out of this depression by the application of sound business principles. This cannot be done by talk about debt cancellation or the elimination of so-called barriers to international trade, which means only the lowering of American tariffs to put the American producer into competition with the low priced production of Europe and the Orient.

That winning the battle over the depression is an American affair so far as the people of the United States are concerned, is pretty generally recognized by our people. Only the importers, the theoretical free traders and the international bankers who have a big stake in Europe are now talking about solving the depression by international agreements which would put Uncle Sam into European politics.

The case of the American citizen who thinks in terms of his own country and its welfare was well summed up in a recent editorial opinion of the Progressive Labor World, a sound American labor paper which said, in part, under the caption, Solve America's Problems First:

"We are within a few months of a presidential election. Domestic issues of the greatest importance are in the balance. Voters are insistently pressing candidates for explicit statements showing what they propose to do to relieve an intolerable situation.

"This is no time to suggest that the idle, the hungry, the naked, must look to international agreements for relief.

"We must not furnish perplexed politicians with an easy alibi which would enable them to say to inquisitive constituents: 'Don't ask us now what we will do for the farmer and the unemployed. Wait till we get through with our international "talk-fest" at Geneva or Lausanne, or some other European center.'

"We have had too much of that kind of 'buck passing' in recent years.

"Our economic recovery is not contingent upon what some foreign country may or may not do. It must never be forgotten that we have the means to put agriculture on its feet and to supply employment for our jobless army. All we need is the courage and intelligence to use them.

"Of course, it is highly desirable that the rest of the world should come to its senses, get rid of the war complex, reduce armamanet and prepare to live in peace with its neighbors. Every decent man and woman is praying for that blessed day to dawn.

"But—we cannot permit plans for the millennium to interfere with the solution of the problems which are crowding us so fiercly at this moment."

A MULTITUDE OF CANDIDATES

In an editorial commenting on the number of names filed for the various offices to be voted on in the coming Massachusetts primary, the Boston Transcript says:

"Primary reform may come of its own accord, if the filings continue to present the jumble of candidates listed in Secretary Cook's office yesterday. More than 2,300 persons have filed for only a fraction of that number of offices for which nominations will be made in the primaries September 20. For the eight seats in the Governor's Council 200 persons seek nomination. In the Ninth Congressional District, in which Congressman Robedt Luce is seeking renomination, three of the Republicans are contesting, and thirteen Democrats. For the State ticket the figures are as follows: Governor, four Republicans, two Democrats; lieutenant governor, two Republicans, eight Democrats; secretary of the commonwealth, one Republican, twelve Democrats; treasurer, three Republicans, two Democrats; auditor, three Republicans, five Democrats; attorney general, one Republican, six Democrats.

"This is democracy run mad. Out of this welter of aspirants how can any voter mark his primary ballot intelligently? An overwhelming number of these candidates are not known even by name throughout the state, many of them not in the districts they are ambitious to represent. Present officeholders, particularly on the state ticket and for Congress, probably will find safety in the numbers of their opponents, and the prestige the incumbents maq have attained through their service. Incumbents in the primaries may designate themselves as 'for renomination,' but this distinction must disappear from the ballots used on election day."

There can be little disputing the argument put forth by the Boston paper. The same conditions hold true in other communities and other states. It was the theory of the primary, when such legislation was generally enacted, that it would give the people a chance to rule. But in most cases it doesn't work out that way. In the first place the people are so fed up on a continual series of elections that they do not turn out as they should and nominations are made by minorities, and often by minorities which win not because of their fitness but their activity. And in populous regions there are so many names filed that the average voter is at a loss, in many instances, to know whom to vote for, with the result that he marks the greater part of his ballot hapharzadly, just to get it over with as quickly as possible.

And instead of becoming the boon of the poor candidate the primary very often defeats him. For the candidate who has the money or the influence to build a big organization and to advertise and send out quantities of literature about himself has a big advantage over the financially poor candidate, especially in populous districts above referred to.

Although the primary was supposed to get rid of the political bosses it has not done so. It has only served to make the bosses less responsive to party discipline. Nobody would, of coure, want to go back to the old convention system without safeguards. The man who can devise a workable system, combining what good there may be found in the primary system with the party convention, will be a real benefactor to his country.

COMMODITY PRICES IN OTHER DAYS

Celebrating its fiftieth anniversary, the Wall Street Journal presents a mass of historic data covering the past half century of great interest to the students of finance and economics. Among these is one reviewing commodity prices that has a great deal of significance right now.

"Wheat has been down to 47⅝ this year but it was three cents lower last year, and in 1895 was down to 48⅞.

"Corn has been at 27⅞ this year. In 1896 it was 19½.

"Oats have sold as low as 20½ this year. In the five years, 1895 to 1899 inclusive, they were at some times lower with a record drop in 1896 to 14¾.

"Rye has been quoted down to 34½ in 1932. In 1896 that cerial sold at 28.

"Lard at $3.72 a hundred pounds is this year's low, but lard was $3.05 in 1896. It is interesting to note that lard at wholesale sold for $35.85 a hundred in the glittering year of 1919, more than we are paying for butter at retail now.

"Sugar was as low as $3.70 this year. In 1895 it was $3.68.

"Cotton down to 5 cents for New York Uplands this year was at a 50 year low, although in 1895 and '99 it was under 6 cents."

The politically minded will not fail to note that the lower figures in this review hark back to the Democratic administration of Grover Cleveland.

AN INDUSTRIAL IMPROVEMENT

Concrete evidence of an improvement in industrial conditions is contained in the report of the Department of Labor Employment Service for July. Indications of an upturn in industrial activities have been coming from all parts of the country in recent weeks. Statistics which must necessarily lag behind actual conditions, now confirm the fact that the country is emerging from the slough of depression.

This improvement is more impressive since it took place during the middle of the summer, when business is usually slack. August will probably show a more pronounced upturn. A more optimistic feeling prevailed, according to the report of the Employment Service, with the outlook for August considered encouraging. Harvesting is under way. More workers will be needed to gather in crops, and farmers will soon be spending their yearly incomes on supplies for the winter.

When this report is coordinated with other recent developments in the economic field, it furnishes a substantial background for the more optimistic outlook of the people. Gold is again flowing into the United States. All thought of a money crisis has passed, and credit has been made available for all legitimate business activities. Commodity prices have turned upward, increasing nearly 1 percent last month. A phenomenal appreciation of security prices has contributed to the improved credit situation and to the general attitude of the people.

When all of these factors are combined they represent considerable progress against the forces of depression, says the Washington Post. It is true that the psychological factor plays a large part in this improvement, but psychology also was a large element in the dark economis picture of two and three months ago. Unless some unforseen forces cast a shadow over this "better feeling" it will sooner or later be transformed into more production and more consumption.

Progress toward better times is and should be slow. A too rapid rise would certainly be followed by another disastrous reaction. Steady improvement based on the solid foundation of supply and demand offers the greatest hope for recovery. As one factor after another becomes stable and a large majority of the lines in the economic chart begin to take an upward direction the entire industrial system gathers momentum.

BOY SCOUT ORGANIZATION WANTS ONE OUT OF FOUR

National Headquarters Announces 10-Year Program of Development in Building Citizenship

The Boy Scouts of America today announced a Ten Year Program which has been developed as a definite contribution toward the upbuilding of American Citizenship.

The program provides that at least one boy in every four arriving at voting age shall have had the benefit of four years of training as a Boy Scout.

The plan, is was said, proposes an answer to a growing public demand for a genuinely interested body of citizens, thoroughly devoted to the promotion of the general welfare and entirely committed to the advancement of the public interest.

"It will insure more participating citizens, less violation of law, and more unselfish service for others," the announcement stated.

A copy of the program and details of its proposed operation was received at the Council Office by Executive Frank B. Cale, Cumberland, from Dr. James E. West, the Chief Scout Executive. Similar communications were received by Scoutmaster George H. Hanst and other Scout officials whose service it will be to put the plan into operation locally.

Dr. West's latter stated that the program carried the unqualified endorsement of President Hoover, who has not only followed the precedent of his predecessors in serving as Honorary President of the Boy Scouts of America but also upon many occasions has shown unusual interest in the development of the organization and its activities. The President's endorsement took the form of a letter to Walter W. Head of New York, President of the National Council, of the Boy Scouts of America, in which he pointed out the importance of maintaining character building agencies.

President Hoover issued a challenge at the twentieth anniversary dinner of the Boy Scouts of America in Washington when he pointed to many failures in citizenship and betrayals of leadership in America and called attention to the fact that there were a million Boy Scouts in the United States and "raw material for ten million more."

Beause of the evident interest of the President, Dr. West announced the establishment of a President's Award of a streamer or metal marker for Troop Colors of each Boy Scout Troop which attains to a very high standard in the development of the program of Citizenship growth.

A similar award, Dr. West said, will be made available for the Cumberland Council in the event it reaches a high standard of progress in relation to the program of citizenship growth. Still other awards will be made available to groups of Councils and to each of the twelve Scout Regions in the United States having a majority of its Councils win an award. Executive Gale said he was certain that the Oakland Troop would win an award and that the Cumberland Council would be a strong contender for Council honors.

Writing to Executive Gale concerning the program of Citizenship Growth, Dr. West said, "It will mean a better community, a better state, a better nation. It will be a definite contribution of the Boy Scouts of America to our country.

"There should now be an emphasis upon a program of intensive development to the end that the actual realization of the ultimate purpose of Scouting, 'the development of men of character trained for participating citizenship,' may be definitely sought within a specific time."

Scoutmaster George H. Hanst stated that an attempt would be made in this county to bring in new boys in existing troops and to form new ones.

MUST SAFEGUARD HEALTH OF BEGINNERS IN SCHOOL

They Will Be Making Most Important Change in Daily Routine

Here's to the youngsters who will start on the long, long road to the three R's, in a few days. Wishing them happiness and success and above all, health, Dr. R. H. Riley, director of the State Department of Health has this to say to the parents:

"Only a few days remain before the schools will re-open and of the thousands who will be starting schoolward none will be making a more important change in their daily routine, and need to be more carefully safeguarded than the beginners, just starting their school careers. If you have not had it done during the summer, take these youngsters to your family doctor and to your dentist. Let the children have as thorough a going-over as you would give to your automobile if you were getting ready for a long, trying journey.

"If your doctor or your dentist finds conditions that need correction, have them attended to before the children start to school. Teachers who have kept a careful check of attendance and progress of children in the grades, all agree that the children who start in, in good physical condition and who who are free from preventive physical handicaps, lose less time and make the grade much more easily than those do who are dragged down by ill health.

"The State Department of Health in cooperating with the State and local Parent-Teacher Associations, has been urging parents to have their five and six year-olds examined by their own doctors and dentists, during the summer months, in preparation for their enrollment in school. Child health conferences arranged by the County Health Officers in cooperation with the Bureau of Child Hygiene of the State Department of Health, have been held as usual throughout the counties. In addition, the Department's Child Healthmobile, with a doctor and dentist in charge, has visited a number of counties in Southern Maryland and on the Eastern shore for the purpose of reaching mothers and young children in the more out-of-the-way places.

"Between four and five thousand young children have been examined at these conferences and through the efforts of the Parent-Teacher Associations a number of other children have been taken to their own doctors, but as the State Department of Education is preparing for an enrollment, in the beginner's grade, of four times that many, it is obvious that a great many of the children who will enter school this fall, have not had the benefit of such safeguarding care.

"You would have your machine inspected if you were going to start on a journey. Don't think less of your children than you do of your automobile."

MT. LAKE PARK

For a Worthy Cause

"Scrvice" is a word we sometimes think is overworked, and one that is often used thoughtlessly by writers and public speakers. There is frequently an ulterior motive behind service performed—self-gain and personal ambition.

But, as has been frcquently mentioned in this column during the last four years it has appeared, there is one organization, at least, in Garrett county, that unselfishly devotes its service to the public for the good of the public alone, without thought of personal gain. That organization is the Oakland Volunteer Fire Department.

The residents of Loch Lynn and of Mountain Lake Park, whether summer sojourners owning cottages, or all-the-year residents, owe to that organization, and to its personnel, a debt which can not be paid in thanks alone. Fire fighting is a dangerous occupation—hazardous in the extreme. Frequently some member of a fire company is injured in the line of duty—sometimes permanently.

The time has come when we of Loch Lynn and the Park can not ease our conscience and dismiss our responsibility by vain repetition of "thanks" and "that's fine." Something more substantial is coming to the Oakland Fire Department from us. Realizing this a plan has been formulated whereby it is hoped a substantial sum will be raised among our citizens and tendered the Department —not in payment of services rendered but as a token of appreciation.

As usual, when things like this are to be done the women of the community have initiated the plan and will carry on. So, when some of these volunteer solicitors call on you kindly remember they are doing you a service with no special benefit to themselves. They are only endeavoring to add to the efficiency of an already efficient organization and reduce the fire hazard to your property. There should be a spirit of willingness in any donations you may feel like making—large or small.

Community pride, if no higher consideration prompts us, can not let this movement fail.

Where Nerves Go Ragged

A little fun now and then is relished by the best of mcn.

As we were driving home from Oakland this morning at a moderate rate of speed we were suddenly startled by a shrill blast of what we took to be Corporal Currie's whistle. Obediently, but with fear and much trembling—wondering wherein we had violated the law—fearful we had left our driving card at home, we gave the signal and pulled to the right of the roadway and stopped to await the majesty of the law. Glancing back we saw a grinning youngster with a whistle in his mouth, who gave us the "go" signal and a braying "heehaw."

We got as much kick out of the incident as did the kid.

Weather Wise Having Innings

And comes the woolly worm weather predictions, augmented by the caterpillar and heavy foliage prognostications.

Marvin Harmison bases his open winter hopes on the coloring and light head and tail rings on the woolly worm and caterpillar, while Nels Miller is thinking of selling his livestock and moving to Florida because the heavy foliage and thick husks on the corn are unfailing signs of a severe winter. We are playing along with Harmison, hoping almost against hope that he has graduated into the Murray White class of weather prophets. But before placing an order for our winter supply of fuel, we will wait until the dean of the prognosticators speaks.

Registered Cows Die

Joseph E. Callis, farmer near Loch Lynn, recently lost five cows, two of them registered animals, by a disease which has not clearly been diagnosed. The sixth cow and a registered bull have been stricken in recent days and both have been inoculated and may recover. The disease may be murrain fever and may be contracted by the animal drinking water from a stagnant pool or by eating some poison weed or shrub.

Courtney Wilson, of Gorman, states the disease to be murrain fever, but this diagnosis has not been confirmed by Dr. William George Chrisman, of the State Department of Agriculture at College Park.

CLOSE TO 30,000 ATTEND FESTIVAL OF TABLELAND

Pageantry Reviving Colonial Era Presented Saturday—Music Predominates on Sunday

COUNTY IS REPRESENTED

Between 25,000 and 30,000 persons gathered at Somerset, Pa., Saturday and Sunday to witness and participate in the annual fall festival of the Allegheny Tableland Association, which was featured by elaborately produced pageants, impressive choral presentations and a street parade which moved over the principal thoroughfares of the town on Saturday morning.

The program features of the festival were presented at Rhoades Field —Somerset's municipal airport—and attracted spectators from a half dozen counties in western and southwestern Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia and Virginia. The attendance Saturday was estimated at 10,000 persons and was more than doubled on Sunday.

Twenty-two floats were in the parade to the airport Saturday morning and a feature of the procession was the appearance of the drum and bugle corps directed by Eli Sheetz, Washington, D. C., candy manufacturer who formerly resided in Somerset and is a regular attendant at the Tableland festivals. The junior drum and bugle corps of Oakland, composed of the young boys of that town, also attracted much attention. Their work was highly commended and their appearance in the parade brought much applause. The One Hundred and Tenth Infantry band, conducted by Capt. Don M. Kimmell, also participated in the parade and presented concerts at the airport both afternoons.

Tony Beaver, the legendary character of the tableland country, again presided over the programs at the airport and saw an elaborate presentation of colonial and early American dances given by residents of Somerset county garbed in historically-correct costumes. The bicentennial of the birth of George Washington was the dominating theme of the performance.

Musical features, both vocal and instrumental, were presented by groups from the tri-state area embraced in the Tableland at both performances. Many of the smaller musical groups were heard at churches in the borough at the regular services Sunday morning.

Jailed on Moonshine Charge—Other Minor Offenses

Everett F. Hershman, Hutton, arrested Saturday in the woods near Hutton by Federal agents, is out on $500 bond, pending action of the Garrett County Grand Jury which convenes on September 12. Officers seized a 40-gallon still and three barrels of mash.

Austin Roy, of Mt. Lake Park, was found not guilty of the charge of assault and battery upon Frank Woods, at a hearing before Justice W. A. Gonder on Saturday.

After some cattle of E. A. Bernard had gotten into the fields of Arthur Deahl, of near Bloomington, and Deahl would not return them or let Bernard come after them, Deahl was fined $1 and costs before Justice Gonder last Thursday on a charge of disorderly conduct. In default of payment of the fine and costs he is being lodged in the county jail.

Grant Harvey, Deer Park, was fined $1 and costs on Monday on a charge of reckless driving. He failed to hold out his hand near the corner of Second and Oak streets and struck a Chevrolet car. No one was injured.

Samuel F. Amtower, Keyser, W. Va., was fined $5 and costs on Sunday for reckless driving. Corpora Thomas Currie of the State police, stated Amtower was attempting to pass another car at the top of the rise north of Deep Creek Bridge, just as Currie came over the rise, heading for Oakland.

S. H. Wainer, Elkins, W. Va., was fined $1 and costs Tuesday night on a charge of being drunk and disorderly. Officer B. B. Nethkin made the arrest.

Irving Broadwater, Jr., was taken to Memorial Hospital, Cumberland, on Saturday night and on Sunday morning was operated upon for appendicitis. He is now convalescing and will be brought to the home of his parents, Dr. and Mrs. N. I. Broadwater, within a few days.

OVER 5000 PRESENT AT ANNUAL K. OF P. PICNIC

Thirteenth Annual Affair Is Officially Opened With Parade

With fair weather prevailing, an estimated crowd of between 5,000 and 6,000 people attended the thirteenth annual Labor Day picnic held under the auspices of the local lodge of Knights of Pythias in Helbig's Grove, on the north edge of town, Monday and Monday night. The large crowd lingered until after the fireworks display at 10:30 o'clock.

The day's program was officially opened at 10:30 o'clock a. m., when a parade with the marshalls, A. R. Martin and Guy O. Yutzy, with lodge officers at the head, passed through the streets of town, followed by the Crellin band, the junior drum and bugle corps, the Oakland Fire Department, the Girl Scouts, members of the Red Cross nursing unit, the Oakland Band, Legion drum and bugle corps, members of the local lodge Knights of Pythias, automobiles from several of the local garages and a display of how the farmers used to thresh grain —the flail method.

C. Thomas Summers, Frederick, Grand Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, was present, as well as other officers of the grand lodge. Weaver's Park Attractions and other amusements and entertainment held the picnickers, while the two bands entertained with concerts throughout the day and evening. A square dancing pavilion was erected and dancing continued from early afternoon until late at night.

The electric mixer was awarded to Mayor Grover C. Stemple; the homemade quilt to Carl Frazee and the hooked rug to Paul Ott. Members of the Oakland Boy Scout troop parked cars during the day.

Although no figures as to the financial success of the picnic are available, it is thought that the receipts will be practically as much as in the past several years and will show a profit over the expenses.

ANNUAL RED CROSS ROLL CALL TO BE NOV. 11-24

Armistice Day To Thanksgiving Is Set Aside For Drive

The annual roll call, or membership campaign of the American Red Cross is announced by national headquarters for November 11 to 24, Armistice Day to Thanksgiving. This is the season which for twelve years has been set aside as most appropriate for rededicating support to the organization which is best known in time of war as "The Great Mother" and in time of peace as "The National Relief Agency."

More than 3,000 chapters will use volunteer workers in canvassing the communities in their jurisdictions. The Garrett County chapter will have volunteer workers to solicit subscriptions, the same as in other years, with local chairmen in the various communities directing.

Membership dues support both regular and emergency activities of the Red Cross. Regular services thus financed include health activities, assistance to veterans, disaster work, relief to the families of the unemployed, first aid, life saving, public health nursing, home hygiene instruction and the Junior Red Cross. Fifty cents of each fee goes for national, insular and international work, the remainder being kept in the local communities for local services.

The Red Cross is urging increased membership to enable the organization to meet present and prospective needs. In making its appeal, it calls attention to the unprecedented demand on Red Cross facilities occasioned by a succession of drought, tornadoes, floods and unemployment.

Religious Education Council Elects Officers

O. P. Jones, Kitzmiller, was elected president of the Garrett County Council of Religious Education at the annual conference held at Kltzmiller on Sunday. Other officers chosen were E. Ray Jones, Oakland, vice-president; Mrs. Ney Wilson, Kitzmiller, secretary and treasurer.

Mrs. Paul Naylor, Oakland, was named children's secretary; Harry Wilson, Kitzmiller, young people's secretary; Mrs. M. H. Lohr, Grantsville, adult secretary; Rev. C. A. Shilke, secretary of education.

The council plans to conduct five standard teacher training schools in the county during the coming year, and it is also planning to hold an adult rally and a young people's rally.

COUNCIL GIVES CONTRACT FOR RAZING OF BUILDING

Remains of Waingold Garage to be Razed—Other Business

Lights along the main streets of town will remain at 400 watts, according to a decision of the Mayor and Town council, at their regular monthly meeting Tuesday night in the Council chamber. Reducing the wattage of street lights has been under discussion in the council for several months, and as a test the light at the corner of Second and Alder streets was reduced to 200 for comparison.

Street lights in the residential section, which were reduced to 100 watts each some time ago, will remain at that strength, the council decided.

Contracts Awarded

Noah Tasker was given the contract for cleaning up the old Waingold property on Liberty street, purchased several months ago by the town. All debris caused by the fire will be removed, the old stable in rear of the building will be torn down, and everything will be cleared away.

This property has a frontage of 110 feet deep. It is planned to erect a community building there . some future date, which at present seems to be quite a ways distant, according to Mayor Stemple.

W. C. Hardesty was awarded the contract for relaying the sidewalk from Alder street to the City Hall on the west side of Third street, he being the lowest bidder. Since Third street was improved last year the sidewalk has been too low.

The council decided to put a "Stop" sign on Crook street, entering Second street.

It was decided to repaint the street crossing lines, for the use of the school children, and everybody is requested to cross the streets only at those points.

The passing of the monthly bills occupied the remainder of the session. The next regular meeting will be held on Monday, October 3.

AVERAGE PRICE OF SALE OF RAMS IS $14.23 EACH

Blue Ribbon Winners of Each Class Bring $28 and $23

Between 175 and 200 persons attended the second annual purebred ram show and sale held in Oakland last Saturday at which 23 rams were sold to Garrett county farmers and those of neighboring communities at an average of $14.23 per head. Last year's sale brought an average of $17.90 per head.

The highest priced ram, a Shropshire, and consigned by E. D. Stottlemyer, of Boonsboro, was purchased by Wilson Brothers, Kitzmiller, for $28.00, while the highest price paid for an animal of the Hampshire strain and consigned by Henry P. Miller, of Grantsville, purchased by Scott Harvey, also of Kitzmiller, for $23.00. The highest price paid last year for a single animal was $46.00.

The show and sale was in charge of K. A. Clarke, animal husbandman, of the University of Maryland Extension Service, and was held for the purpose of raising the standard of flocks.

B. F. Creech, West Virginia University, judged the rams and gave ribbons to the winners. The highest priced ram in each class was a blue ribbon winner. A. C. Collier, Accident, was auctioneer, and ex-Senator Wolfe, president of the Maryland Stockmen's Association, opened the sale.

The purchasers in the Shropshire class and the prices are as follows:

James Wilson, Kitzmiller, $9; Wilson Brothers, Kitzmiller, $10 and $28; Alva Martin, Oakland, $10 and $8.50; John A. Blamble, Gormanla, $16; Stephen Casteel, Oakland, $9.50; P. A. Chlsholm, Gormanla, $12.

The purchasers of the Hampshire animals included J. W. Lower, Mountain Lake Park, $16; R. E. Harvey, Kitzmiller, $19; R. R. Kelly, Terra Alta, W. EXPECT GREAT NUMBER OF EXHIBITORS DURING FAIR

Farmers Everywhere Promising to Enter Their Livestock and Agricultural Products

GROUNDS TO BE IN SHAPE

With reports coming in from former exhibitors and farmers who have not shown at the Garrett County Fair for a number of years, and a number of those who have never before exhibited their products, Henry M. Speicher, secretary and general manager of the sixteenth annual fair, stated that exhibits placed at the fair grounds this year will exceed in number those of former years by a large percentage.

Farmers everywhere in the county are promising to enter their livestock and agricultural products and with the favorable growing conditions this year, there are expectations of the finest show in years.

Grounds In Shape

The fairgrounds and buildings are being put in first class shape to take care of all entries and will be ready to receive them on the time specified.

The fair is to be held on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, September 20, 21, 22 and 23.

PremiumL List the Same

The premium list will be the same as that of last year with the exception that last year's corn may be entered in competition. Prizes will be awarded in classes of horses, sheep, cattle, hogs and other farm animals, poultry, horticultural products, canned goods, agricultural products, all kinds of grain and houschold garments.

The Roberts and Ramish Shows will be here to offer amusement for both young and old. There will be five rides, nine shows and twenty-five concessions. There will be a fireworks display nightly.

Wednesday is School Day

Wednesday will be known as school day at the fair, when a parade of all school children of the county will be held. All children of school age will be admitted to the grounds on that day free of charge.

The gate admission has been lowered to 10 and 25 cents during the day and a general admission of 10 cents at night.

"All that is needed to make the county fair a success," Mr. Speicher said yesterday, "is for people to forget their past differences and cooperate to the fullest extent."

O. P. Jones Chosen Head of County Athletic Association

O. P. Jones, principal of the Kitzmiller high school, was chosen as president of the Garrett County High School Athletic Association at a meeting of the principals of the six schools last Friday afternoon.

Plans were discussed concerning the coming soccer, football and volleyball games between schools and it was decided to have each school play each other school one game, instead of the plan followed last year of dividing the county into the northern and southern groups.

Kempton high school is as yet undecided about entering teams in the county league. A schedule will be arranged by Mr. Jones within a few days, it was announced.

More Cases of Typhoid Are Reported in County

Three more cases of typhoid fever were reported from the southern end of the county yesterday, bringing the total number to approximately two dozen. All precautions are being taken by the State and county health authorities to prevent the spread of the disease into other communities.

Dr. H. F. Schaefer, of the State Department of Health, is visiting a number of towns and taking tests of the water supply there. He is visiting Bloomington, Kitzmiller, Deer Park, Oakland, Friendsville, Shallmar, Crellin, Grantsville, Vindex and other municipalities. Oakland water supply has already been declared pure.

Finzel Road Completed

Concreting on the new Finzel road, which intersects the National Highway at the top of Little Savage Mountain, east of Grantsville, was completed the latter part of last week. The road will be open for travel in about two weeks.

The Swanton road, which was also recently completed, has been opened to traffic.

September Comes In With "Cool Wave" Here

September started in with much cooler weather after the extreme hot days in August.

The temperature took a decided drop Monday night and the cool breeze all day Tuesday foretold what might be coming. Tuesday night it dropped to 33 degrees at the government station at Weber's, while the cloudy condition prevented any serious damage to crops and flowers.

This morning, however, the ground and roof tops were white with frost and the government thermometer registered 32 degrees. Thirty-six degrees was recorded at Deer Park on Wednesday morning, while 31 degrees was registered at Thomas, W. Va., at 6 o'clock Wednesday morning.

Trainmen said that it was cold enough for a fur-lined jacket or overcoat on the mountain grades after midnight.

ANNUAL VISIT TO YARDS AND GARDENS TO BE MADE

Pilgrimage To Start Tomorrow From Home of Miss Loar

The third annual garden pilgrimage, sponsored by the Yard and Garden Contest committee of the Oakland Civic Club, will begin its journey tomorrow afternoon at three o'clock, starting from the home of Miss Lottie Loar, president, it has been announced.

All who desire to see what others have been doing towards the beautification of Oakland are asked to be at Miss Loar's home at the hour stated where cars will be furnished for the trip to those who have no way to travel.

Stops will be made at any or all of the following named homes: H. C. Sincell, Mrs. A. T. Matthews, Mrs. D. M. Dixon, Mrs. W. R. Offutt, Mrs. Edward Offutt, Mrs. E. R. Jones, Mrs. Byron Besse, Mrs. Charles Fleegle, Mrs. Mary Michell, Mrs. Donald R. Sincell, Mrs. Walter Hardesty, Mrs. Asa Coddington, Mrs. Delbert Davis, Mrs. Albert Markley, Mrs. Harry Davis, Mrs. Gordon McRobie, Mrs. Ernest Shirer, Mrs. Henry Shaffer, Mrs. Sam Butler, Mrs. Truman Miller, Mrs. N. I. Broadwater, Mrs. Townshend Naylor, Miss Bertie Cleveland, Mrs. Neil C. Fraley.

Yards and gardens of the above named homes will be inspected where suggestions for next year's growth may be gathered.

No Accidents Reported in County Over Labor Day

While a record Labor Day turnout of the nation's workers was marred by accidental deaths that approached the two hundred mark, Garrett county was not affected, according to Corporal Thomas Currie, of the State police. No accidents of any kind had been reported on Garrett county highways.

Jammed traffic lanes with resultant automobile crashes, bathing beaches and the heat were factors that contributed to turn joyous outings into excursions of tragedy for many toilers.

Airplane crashes claimed six lives and one man was killed and more than a score injured in a train wreck at Waukesha, Wis.

Motor accidents took the greatest number of lives, with drownings second. Nearly three score persons were killed in automobile collisions and dozens were injured.

Library Will Clear $40.

Approximately $40 will be cleared as a result of the dance recital and musical program presented last Thursday evening in the Oakland high school auditorium for the benefit of the Garrett County Free Public Library, according to J. M. Jarboe, the treasurer.

The affair was participated in by the Misses Bolgiano and members of their dancing class. Mrs. J. Gordon Mealy, Miss Helen Jones and Miss Mary Virginia Willison presented several musical numbers.

Abundant Water Supply Here

While many other communities are suffering from a shortage of water, the flow from the wells of the city water supply remains the same, according to a statement of Grover C. Stemple, mayor, this morning.

The reservoir is filled at present and there seems to be no danger of the least shortage, it was stated. Dr. H. F. Schaefer, of the State Department of Health, made a test of the water during the week and declared it to be 100 percent pure.

868 STUDENTS ENROLLED IN SCHOOLS OF OAKLAND

High School Opens With 429 Present — Grade School Has 365 and Parochial School, 74

MORE PUPILS EXPECTED

With an enrollment of 868 pupils, the three Oakland schools opened for the nine-months' term of instruction on Tuesday, September 6. The enrollment in the three schools shows an increase of 47 over last year for the same period, and 98 over the figures two years ago.

Oakland high school opened with 429 students enrolled, an increase of 22 over last year's opening day, with the possibility of several more coming in before the week ends. The enrollment last year mounted during the first few weeks of the school year, according to Principal Bittle, and this is likely to occur again. There are no post-graduates enrolled as yet.

Oakland grammar school opened with an enrollment of 365, an increase of 21 over last year's first day's attendance.

St. Peter's parochial school has 74 pupils in the various grades—41 boys and 33 girls, which is an increase of 4 over last year.

One hundred forty of those enrolled in the high school are freshmen; 104 are sophomores; 103 juniors, and 82 are seniors. The senior class is by far the largest fourth year class in the history of the school, as is the freshman class.

The Oakland grammar school enrollment is divided into grades as follows: First grade, 61; second grade, 58; third grade, 63; fourth grade, 57; fifth grade, 45; sixth grade, 44; seventh grade, 37.

The continued increase in enrollment in the local schools is attributed to transportation of pupils who would otherwise not be able to attend. While conditions in the grammar school seem crowded, the high school would be able to take care of the enrollment adequately, according to Mr. Bittle.

RELIEF COMMITTEE SEEKS HELP THROUGH GOVERNOR

Committee Appointed to Draft Letter Requesting State Aid

Feeling that some sections of the county were badly in need of relief and that the County Commissioners had no money available for that purpose, it was decided at a meeting of the chairmen of the local relief committees and the Central committee with the Commissioners last evening that a letter be written to Governor Ritchie requesting some financial aid, either from the State or from the Federal Relief Loan.

George D. Browning, president of the Commissioners' Board; George W. Harvey and James A. Fitzwater, associate members of the board, and F. E. Rathbun, Dr. H. W. McComas and Rev. Charles Kupfer were appointed as a committee to draft the letter and to embody in it the above facts.

The meeting last night was called by Charles W. Ream, chairman of last year's Central relief committee, at the request of Walter N. Kirkman, the Governor's representative, who appeared before the Commissioners and a body of citizens last month.

Members present last night decided to continue the district relief organizations, but not to reorganize the Central relief committee which disbanded early this summer. Any centralized relief in the future will have to come from the Board of County Commissioners, it was agreed.

Special Legion Meeting Called

A special meeting of Proctor Kildow Post, No. 71, American Legion, has been called by A. G. Hesen, post commander, for Monday evening, September 12, at 7:30 o'clock, in the City Hall.

The meeting is for the purpose of nominating officers of the post for the ensuing year and for taking up maters concerning unemployment of county legionaires and ex-service men. "It is important that all members desiring employment attend this meeting," Commander Hesen stated.

ISRAEL JOURNEYING TOWARD CANAAN

GOLDEN TEXT—And Moses said unto Hobab, the son of Raguel the Midianite, Moses' father-in-law, We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good: for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel.

LESSON TEXT—Numbers 10:11-36.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Following a Shining Cloud.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Wilderness Road.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Camp Life in the Wilderness.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How God Guides His People.

I. Marching from Sinai at the Hand of Moses (vv. 11-28).

The nation had now grown to a great host—the army itself was 603,550 strong. Allowing three persons to every soldier there would be 1,810,650. The moving of such a host required thorough organization. The army was organized into four divisions with three tribes to each division. Each tribe had a commander and an ensign.

1. The signal given to march (v. 11). The lifting of the cloud from off the sanctuary was the signal for the camp to be broken and the march to begin.

2. The signal given to rest (v. 12). Just as the sign to march must be recognized, so the sign to rest must be obeyed.

3. The commander (v. 13). God was the commander through his servant Moses.

4. The order of the march (vv. 14-28). As they marched, the division led by Judah went forward followed by Gershon and Merari bearing the bulkier part of the tabernacle. Then marched Reuben's division followed by the Kohathites bearing the sacred utensils of the tabernacle. These were followed by the divisions of Ephraim and Dan. The ark occupied a central position with the caravan.

II. Moses Seeking the Help of Hobab (vv. 29-32).

Hobab was a shrewd child of the dessert. Moses therefore thought that his knowledge would be helpful. The children of Israel, however, were going forth under the guiding care of the Almighty. Surely he could be trusted. It is a sad thing, indeed, when God is dwelling in the midst of the people that the one whom God had set over them should seek the wisdom and guidance of a man. There seems to be no doubt as to the grave mistake which Moses made in this case, but it is quite certain that he was actuated by a proper motive. Moses made a double plea before Hobab:

1. "We will do thee good." Moses had faith in God's promises to Israel and could well assure Hobab that good would come to him by identifying himself with God's covenant people. All Christians can say to sinners, "Come thou with us and we will do thee good." Hobab's reason for refusing the invitation of Moses was his love for his kindred and home.

2. "Thou mayest be to us instead of eyes." Moses still insisted that Hobab should go along, not only for the good he could get, but for the good he might do. The sinner should come to Christ because he needs salvation, not primarily that he may be of some good by joining with God's people. Hobab seems afterward to have yielded to the entreaty of Moses (Judges 1:16).

III. Marching to Canaan With the Lord as Leader (vv. 33-36).

Even though Hobab did go with Israel we never hear of his leading the people. Observe:

1. "The ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them" (v. 33). The ark, the symbol of the divine presence, moved out of its place in the midst of the camp and took its place at the head. It went before them in the three days' journey to search out a resting place for them.

2. The cloud of the Lord rested upon them (v. 34). This was an indication that God was not only leading, but governing and protecting his people.

3. The Lord's vindication (vv. 35, 36). Moses' unbelief brought reproach upon the Lord. This action on the part of God vindicated his leadership. God is the actual and only sufficient leader whose heart is never faint, who never sleeps. Moses gave recognition to this act of God in identifying himself with his people. When the ark set forward he exclaimed, "Rise up, Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered: and let them that hate thee flee before thee"; and when it rested, "Return, O Lord, unto the many thousands of Israel." When we fail by unbelief, may we, like Moses, quietly and graciously accept the rebuke of the Lord and give him recognition as our leader.

The Mild Madness

A Story of Ambition Realized

By FANNIE HURST

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(WNU Service)

LEOPOLD knew that his family was right, and yet, throughout the years of the early childhood of his children, he held out stubbornly against the often angry importunings of his wife Anna, her relatives, and his.

For a man who had been trained to the lucrative trade of master-plumber, suddenly to turn waiter was not only a matter of supreme humiliation to the Dagmar family, one and all, but, as Anna and his own sisters expressed it, sometimes they actually feared for the sanity of Leopold.

It was not as if he had been lazy. Even his sisters said of him that as a boy he had never given symptoms of a lazy bone in his body. And dear knows the servile work of waiting table in the small Russian restaurant where Leopold took up his new labors was no easier than that of a plumber who hired men to work under him. On the contrary, the hours were practically as long, and certainly more arduous. On his feet, carrying hoisted trays, polishing crockery, even sweeping out, and doing servile chores for patrons, from five in the evening until two and three in the morning, was work of an exacting, if less skilful nature than the plumbing.

Wringing her hands, deploring the lack of dignity his work as waiter implied for his young children, over and over again Anna sought to wrest from Leopold the secret of his sudden decision to abandon his skilled work for the less remunerative, less ambitious vocation of waiter.

Not for worlds, after his five years of life with her, could Leopold have been brought to reveal to her the secret reason for this amazing abandonment of his well-paying trade, for the lesser vocation of waiting table in a small Russian restaurant. Like his sisters, she would have cried and screamed her derision of his selfish, wastrel ways.

The secret motive was neither so profound nor so complicated as that imputed to him by those who felt themselves to be the victims of his vagaries. "He is after women," shouted Anna, knowing in her heart that women were not the cause of Leopold's defection.

"He is crazy after the low-life of the cabarets," accused his sisters, knowing that nothing of the kind was characteristic of Leopold.

The reason, meanwhile, lay snugly imbedded in the silence of Leopold. A simple reason; so simple that it shamed him.

The great advantage of waiting table in a restaurant, over the more dignified, more remunerative work as master plumber, was the music! As a waiter, you worked to music! Your work was servile, yes, often in a way that was hateful and revolting, but as a waiter you worked to music!

A five-piece orchestra played at Kosta's from 7 p. m. until 2 a. m. Russian music for the most part, with a balalaika or Russian banjo accompaniment that was as melancholy as wind in autumn trees, and yet at the same time sweet and plaintive and filled with a certain wild lust for life. Music that was as real as the beautiful black hair on the head of Leopold's two-months-old baby daughter.

You worked to music at Kosta's. At 7, the patrons began to come. At 7:15, in trooped the five-piece orchestra. The dinner went something like this. Zakuska, a hors d'oeuvre, which consisted of chopped liver served usually to the accompaniment of a song that wrung the very heart out of Leopold; a piece called "Ochee," which clumsily translated into "Languorous Eyes." Then the borsch course; thick soup clotted with sour cream, to strains that to Leopold were almost the most beautiful in the world: "The Volga Boat Song," filled with the dirge and the urge of those who sweat and toil. Pojarsky, cutlets of chopped chicken, served to the aria from "Eugene Onegin." And so on through an evening repetitiously crammed with melodies that never seemed to pall.

You could not very well go home and say to the most practical wife in the world, and to sisters to whom life was a serious day-by-day business: "I cannot play a note, I do not know one note from another, but one day, while fixing radiators in the home of a famous violinist, and hearing him practice as I worked, I realized that music can lift life from the hum-drum affair it has always been, into something that makes it worth living. I will work twice as hard as a waiter. I will dump every cent of my earnings into your lap. Let me live in my trance!"

Of course the wife and sisters of Leopold did not let him live in his trance. There were children to rear, clothe, educate and feed, and shortly after the startling defalcation of Leopold Anna developed a nervous illness, induced by worry.

Life stepped in and took a hand in the mild madness which seemed to have got hold of Leopold. Within a month after he had gone to the role of waiter in the Russian restaurant, he was back again at his work of soldering lead, laying pipe and fixing the drains and faucets of people's bathrooms. It must be said for him that he took it philosophically. After all, it was uncontroversial that there were children to be reared, and Leopold had seen too much of the struggle of poverty in his own boyhood not to feel imbued with the desire to spare his offspring as much as possible of pain and deprivation.

The children of Leopold, the four of them, justified his sacrifice. There were three boys and a girl, all of them with their mothers' and sisters' square, practical heads on their young shoulders. And all of them held the same attitude of tolerance toward the parent who spent his evenings and holidays picking out futile and unfinished melodies on the flute that time after time, in despair or in the spirit of practical joke, had been hidden from him by his tormented family.

When Betty, the black-haired baby, reached her maturity, there were four young people in the Dagmar family earning each a good living wage, and contributing to the by no means inconsiderable daily wage of the plumber, Leopold.

Five years later the four children of Anna and Leopold between them were in the proud position to give the sum of one thousand dollars to their father on his sixtieth birthday. That accomplished two really triumphant purposes. It sealed by deed, their loving regard for his generosity to them. It increased the nest egg of Leopold and Anna from four to five thousand dollars. Four of this Leopold presented to the astounded Anna on the occasion of their next wedding anniversary.

With the remaining one thousand, he made the first down payment on a little run-down restaurant in a Russian neighborhood, where for sixty-five cents one could eat a table d'hote dinner, to the strains of a three-piece orchestra that boasted a balalaika.

ALWAYS THERE IS ROOM AT THE TOP

Even Where Professions Are Overcrowded.

Mexico is one country where the people get action from their government.

In the state of San Luis Potosi, for example, the local legislature passed a law the other day suspending higher courses in law and medicine for five years.

The reason was simple. The lawmakers decided that there are enough practicing lawyers and doctors in the state. So why spend money preparing others for these overcrowded professions? they asked.

Which, considered from the standpoint of economy alone, is an unassailable position.

But suppose for a moment that such a philosophy of government prevailed in the United States. Both the medical and legal professions are overcrowded in this country, too. Many physicians and lawyers are eking out a bare existence and every year the colleges, universities and night schools turn out more doctors and lawyers to increase the competition.

Should we pass laws to prevent the teaching of law and medicine just because we have too many lawyers and too many doctors?

Of course not. And the reason is just as simple as the reasoning of the legislators in San Luis Potosi.

We have too many lawyers and too many doctors, it is true, but no one will deny that we have too few good lawyers and too few good doctors. The legal and medical professions are crowded at the bottom, but there is plenty of room at the top.

It is an inexorable law of human nature that mediocrity prevails, even in the skilled professions. Thousands of young men are studying law and medicine. Most of them will land in the crowded bottom ranks of their profession. A few will go to the top and do great things for humanity. In American medical colleges young men are studying who will make discoveries which will prolong the span of life. In law schools of today future justices of the Supreme court are learning the rudiments of law.

It is quite obvious that we would lose something of inestimable value if we closed down the law schools even for five years to gain a few dollars in lowered expense.—Houston Post-Dispatch.

Jewish "Baptism"

Baptism as it is understood by Christians is not practiced by the Jews. There was, however, an ancient Jewish rite known as Jewish baptism or proselyte baptism which bears a striking similarity to Christian baptism. When a pagan became a convert to Judaism he was compelled, after submitting to circumcision, to go through a purificatory washing. This washing symbolized the removal of all pagan impurity and the stranger who sojourned among the Israelites did not become one of them until he had complied with this rite. Orthodox Jews still require gentiles to comply with this rite when they become converts to Judaism.—Pathfinder Magazine.

School Robbed of Oranges

The Granada (Calif.) grammar school is probably the only one that has its private orange orchard, but even that has its drawbacks. Late at night while teachers and pupils were away from the school grounds, and the school closed, thieves entered the orchard, where more than 400 boxes of Valencia oranges had been gathered and stored. They took away the entire harvest.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

Labor Day Is Right

Labor Day is the right term—make no mistake about it. Labor from morn until night for most of us, in one way or another.

Many worked overtime in order to enjoy a rest on Labor Day. Quite a number rested by going to a dance at The Pines from 12:01 a. m. until 4:00 Monday morning. Others chose the morning parade for their rest. Bob Hoffman dressed up in a hot uniform and marched for a mile and a half with a goose step and arms swinging a baton at regular gait; fifty or more band boys marched behind; the Legion drum and bugle corps, the junior drum and bugle corps took their Labor Day rest by marching along with the rest of them.

Harry Stemple, Turk Shartzer, Stanley Bond, Paul Riley, Dave Walter, Ed. Kahl, Alva Gortner and the whole bunch of active and aggressive Knights of Pythias got up early, worked all day and most of the night on the picnic grounds spending quite a restful Labor Day vacationing from their work.

The Crellin and Oakland bands rendered a number of restful concerts; the Boy Scouts spent their rest period parking cars from 10:00 a. m. until late at night; the square dancers spent their vacation working harder on the little platform than they would had they been back on the farm flailing buckwheat.

Several thousand others rested by milling around among the crowd at the picnic grounds, standing on their own feet and other people's feet the entire day. And let me tell you it was a day of real hard labor for the mouths that kept gabbing.

Maybe you were in the class who took their vacation by driving 200 or more miles in your automobile in the hot sun. Quite restful, if you ask my opinion, which you probably won't. But then, who asked for yours, either? Standing bareheaded in the hot sun must have had its effect—I have a feeling somewhat similar I can imagine that quite a lot of them felt on Tuesday morning who saw not so much sunshine, but moonshine.

Sitting here wondering what might be hoomerous this week, I can think of nothing except those who thought they were getting a rest by having Labor Day.

For my own part I chose to drive, but I Ididn't bargain on the roads I went over, which looked like the bottom of Big Youghiogheny river with a few extra boulders thrown in for good measure. I speeded over this race track at a breath-taking rate of six miles every forty-five minutes, not counting the distance I spent in going up in the air and coming down again. Luckily, each time I came down I was still in the automobile, which accounts in large measure for the fact that I am here today and writing this. The news must go out at all costs. The public must be fed and the newspaper is its meat. Use the rest of this column to wash it down with.

Outside of this little trip I was on the road gang for several hours, canning tomatoes, attending a reunion and hunting for a house. But you knew we were hunting for a house, and Labor Day is really a vacation when it comes to honse hunting.

It was at the Scout court of honor meeting last Friday. "What effect does alcohol have upon the human system?" Deacon Jones asked Bob Lawton, and Bob answered correctly.

"How about the use of tobacco?" Deacon continued, and Bob answered correctly again.

"What inference do you draw from that?" he then asked, and Bob answered:

"Why, nicotine."

Maybe One Reduced

"Two and two-tenths less teachers than last year have been assigned at Oakland High Schhool," the Democrat stated last week.

That should make 15 4-5 up there right now. * * *

Who was the man who kept pace with the fiddlers on the dance platform at the K. of P. picnic by whistling eternally and gliding about whenever a vacant space permitted?

And who was the square dancer who looked like he wouldn't last another dance, and yet kept going throughout the afternoon and evening?

Who was discovered carting some moonshine out of a house after it had been brought there and bottled?

Who's your little whoosiz?

Who wants to read any more of this stuff this week? Or any time for that matter, if you want to get sarcastic?

The Good Gift

By ALICE ROUNDY

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) (WNU Service)

AUTONOE MORRIS, young, well-born, well-bred, prettily blond and extremely conventional, sat on a tnft of Bnffalo grass gazing over the broad Montsna plains. She was awaiting the coming of Eric Willoughby, a yonng ranchman of English descent, who was the only man in the world who dared to shorten her distinguished name to Nora. He had requested her to await him here in the shade of a wind-mill not far from the ranchonse. From his manner she believed that he was going to ask her to marry him. This she knew to be impossible because she was the only and adored child of wealthy parents who believed that no man was quite good enongh for her.

Presently she beheld him approaching at a gallop on his superb horse, the pick of the range.

Reaching her side, he threw himself off the horse, leaving him to graze, and sented himself on the ground near her. Without preliminaries, as if he were continuing a line of thought, he said, "Marriage seems to me the grave of freedom."

"So is everything in life if one allows it to be," replied Autonoe, dogmatically. "We are chained to ourselves."

"I have been interested in you ever since your Uncle Johnnie first told me about you and said that he was going East to rescue you."

Autonoe gazed at him in amnzement. "He said that you were like a lizard waiting to cast its skin. Eyes shut. The whole of you encased in the dead cuticle of your parents' prejudices and fears and culture. And unless you could be freed, you would have no life of your own."

"A thoroughly Western point of view!" murmured Autonoe, haughtily.

"Since you came," he continued, relentlessly, "I have seen that he was dead right."

At the smack of his words, his manner of uttering them, Autonoe felt the lizard skin crack from top to bottom.

"I cannot understand," she remarked plaintively, "why a man when he proposes, should make himself so disagreeable."

"I am not proposing to you," asserted Eric, sharply.

"Certainly you nre. And the answer is (very plumply) no."

He smiled acridly.

"At lease you are alive," he said, "and I sometimes have doubted that. I do not wish to hurt your vanity, bnt my thoughts at present nre occnpied by a very different type of woman. A Mexican, a dancer in a cafe, superbly dark—I prefer brunettes."

Since he loathed poetry, Autonoe began to qnote from a poem as Greek as her name.

Eric, as if stung unendurably, sprang to his feet and begsn to tighten Pollmino's cinch.

Eric yanked up his horse's head and threw himself into the saddle. Snrprised, Pollmino reared to his fnll height, an appalling wall of flesh. Eric sat like a rock, fearless in perfect control. With a catch of her breath, Autonoe thonght him like Baldur the Beautifnl.

The horse's feet once more on earth, Eric said fiercely, with a swift glance at Autonoe's nseless little hands:

"A ranchman's wife mnst be up at dawn and put in a fourteen hour dny. She must scrub, cook, launder her man's clothes, mend them, feed the dogs nnd serve every stranger that hallos the house."

Then, with a lift of the rein and a tonch of the spur, he sent Pollmino forward in a swift gallop.

Antonoe, turning her back upon him, retnrned to the house to find her Uncle Johnnie. A middle-aged, prosperous ranchman, with peculiarly steady eyes, he was resting from labor on the wide piazza in a comfortable chair and watching a distant scene. One of his men in a flivver, rounding up straying cattle, and another flying overhead in a small airplane, surveying fences. His Mexican wife, not older than he but deplorably wrinkled, was waiting on him slavishly.

Sinking into a chair beside him, Autonoe said soberly:

"Uncle Johnnie, I want Aunty Pepita to teach me to cook, and scrub, and feed the dogs and—and—"

Her uncle looked at her with perfect understanding.

"You mustn't mind anything that Eric says at present," he said, soothingly. "He is awfully stirred np by the ideals which you represent because they are like those which he himself had when he first came out here. But he seems to have lost them in this rongh life and he has been in danger of marrying at a low level," (with a flitting glance at his own wife). "But if he has begnn to quarrel with yon, he is saved. And yon must remember that this is the West where—"

"I know," interrupted Autonoe, impatiently. "But I prefer gentlemen, bland and conrteous like my father, and I am going straight back East, where they grow."

Her uncle, with a kindly smile, left the decision with her.

And presently she was smiling at her contradictory self. For in her heart of hearts she knew that sooner or later, when he hsd won the fight over himself, Eric wonld come back to her bearing the good gift. Meanwhile, she must make herself worthy of it and prepare for the time when she should be not Autonoe but Nora.

Rain or Shine

By DUFORD JENNE

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) (WNU Service)

"NOW look here, youngster, do you know anything about this chap who seems to interest you so much?" Mr. Lane asked, his heavy brows settling.

His daughter smiled. "I know I like him. Isn't that enough?" she queried.

"A woman's intuition, Ruth, is all right as far as it goes, but it doesn't go far enough. You don't know what he does for a living by your own confession, and I heard you say that you can't get track of him during the daytime."

"The point is, father," she said, "I like him. I met him at the art school; I like his ways—and he seems to like mine. He probably has some reason for not telling me where he lives, and for keeping under cover during the day. I'll nsk him, some time—although I trust him enough never to ask him."

"Well prove it—bring him here to dinner tomorrow night, and I'll bet you the string of pearls you wanted that he won't."

Ruth was not so sure of the situntion; and when she met him that night at a little hidden restaurnnt where he seemed to prefer to meet her, he hesitated at her request.

Ills eyes were troubled and a bit weary. "Honestly, Rnth I don't know. I am—" He pausod.

"You aren't afraid of my dad, are you?"

A little light flickered in his gray eyes. "No, but it might be embarrassing—" Again he paused.

She put a small hand over his lean finely modeled hand. "Dick, you know I am learning to think heaps of you, and in the way of things you must let father meet you; nnd besides, I must win that string of pearls." She told him about the wsger.

He isughed. "Come rain or shine! I'm with yon!"

So it came about the next evening that Ruth greeted the tnll young man whose eyes were tender upon her as he snw her. She led him into the library where her father rose to meet him.

Her father's glance was searching. "I am glad to meet yon, Mr. Lamson."

"Like fun," Ruth said to herself. "Bnt you're going to be."

The two men talked easily together, but Ruth could see that her father was pnzzled—the attitude of a man who seems to be trying to place a face in his memory.

Ruth left the men talking and slipped out to check the dinner arrangements. Finding them all right, she called them into the dining room.

"Go in, you young people, I'll be right along," her father said.

As she snd Dick seated themselves, she hesrd her father going to his study, and she wondered what was up. Bnt he returned shortly, and the dinner went along famously.

Then came the shock about fifteen minntes later. Suddenly, three men appeared at the three entrances to the dining room.

Her father rose, his face grim. Mr. Lamson alias Mr. Van Relder, I believe we have you—"

"Father, what do you mean?" Ruth demanded, her henrt pounding.

"Your friend," he said coldly, "had reason to keep out of sight. He is Relder, the embezzler. I thought I recognized his fnce!"

"It isn't true! I know it isn't!" Ruth cried, trembling.

"No, it isn't, Ruth," her lover said, a new, odd note of authority in his voice. "I am a mere hard-working stndent in nn architect's office. "I'm trying to keep busy at it. As luck will have it, I resemble this confounded Relder. I have been nabbed twice because I do; so I have been keeping out of sight and praying that they wonld catch the son-of-a-gun, and give me a chance to go out without being picked np. Call either Blaine or Armstrong, the architects, and they will tell you who I am. It's no longer a joke, believe me."

The oldest of the three men had come to the table. He picked up one of Lamson's hands. "Pardon me, sir, I know a mistake hns been made before, but I am another precinct. May I see your palm?"

He looked at it and turned to her father. "This is not Mr. Relder.

"You were evidently mistaken, sir."

He beckoned to the other two men, and they went ont, trying to hide their smiles.

"Dad, you are darned clever," Rnth said, imitating her father's grim tone. "And you are going to pay more than a string of beads for it, too. Yon are going to give us that house on the avenue when we are married."

Her father lifted his hands. "I'm licked—and I'm sorry," he said hstily. "I'll make np for it."

"It's all right as far as I am concerned, sir," Dick said smiling. "You were doing the right thing, and would hsve had me if I had been Relder."

Her father gave him a look of gratitude, and Ruth noting it and knowing him, knew that the sun had come and the rain had gone.

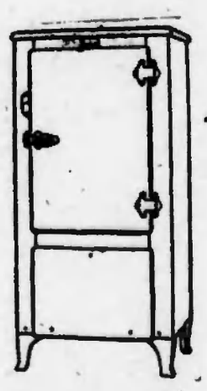
"And you've been holding this back all these years"?



"BOY, what a meal! And to think we've never had it before. What's the big reason, Marge, for holding it back on me all this time?"

"Well, it's this way, Jim. You probably don't recognise what you really are eating but the whole thing is made from meats and vegetables and things I've been keeping in the new Electric Refrigerator. You see I couldn't keep leftorers very long before. But now I seldom throw away a thing. You'd be surprised how much further our food budget goes. I believe the savings in food alone will more than pay the small monthly payments we make on the electrical refrigerator. It certainly was a very wise investment!"

You, too, can make this money-saving investmont. Investigate to-day.

BE FAIR MINDED—

So many things have been said so many times about the benefit of holding a Garrett Counuty Fair that it seems unnecessary to enumerate them again.

This year, as in past years, Henry M. Speicher, general manager of the Fair, is asking the people of the county to become fair minded. Think fair, talk fair, act fair and Garrett county will have a show worth the effort. And above all, forget the petty differences of the past.

With the crops in good condition, everybody has an opportunity to make this annual event one to be remembered. Why not try it?

SCHOOL DAYS

With Tuesday came the end of the school children's vacation, when thousands of children in Garrett county joined thousands of others in other counties and states of the nation in the march to the school room, marching with conflicting emotions as the sound of the bell summoned them to another year's routine of class and study.

These varied emotions are shared by the teachers as well as pupils, for no instructor, regardless of how well he or she may love the work may hope to find unmitigated pleasure in the year's work of teaching young ideas how to shoot and instructing the pupil in many other ways that formerly was not considered part of the curriculum.

Physicians and health officers stress the need of perfect or nearly perfect health as part of the necessary equipment for the pupil. No child is fitted to study with impaired vision, defective molars or physical imperfections of any kind and in this the parents and guardians can be of great assistance to the teacher in doing everything possible to safeguard against disease. A clean body tends to keep the mind clean and with a healthy, receptive mind the child's struggle for an education loses much of its disadvantages and dread.

Parents can help, too, by keeping in touch with the work of the child and the teacher, for a teacher who is on friendly terms with the child's parents is able to do better work because of the sympathy and understanding thus established. The child profits by this mutual interest and the study period is easier and attendance need not be urged or enforced.

The march to the school room is a march of civilization, of progress and enlightenment. Many of these children are potential teachers. The task of gaining an education is a cooperative one, and through cooperation comes the highest form of success.

A KICK BACK

Governor Roosevelt's attacks on the present administration at Washington have been altogether fortunate, as the resulting publicity has shown. First, after accusing the administration of bringing on the panic through laxness in handling the financial situation and stating how he would remedy it by close regulation of the stock market and of the banking profession. Governor Roosevelt was reminded that the biggest stock exchange in the world is located in New York City and amenable to the laws of the State of New York, while perhaps the largest and most nauseous of American bank failures has been that of the Bank of the United States, in New York City, a state bank, under the control of the State Banking Commissioner of New York, who is in turn under the control of Governor Roosevelt.

In his New Jersey speech handling the liquor traffic Governor Roosevelt again inferred that the national government had failed in enforcing the liquor laws and that it would be possible for states to avoid the return of saloons after the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, without any constitutional guaranty against the return of the saloon. After which Governor Roosevelt was reminded that nowhere have liquor law violations been more flagrant than in New York Ctiy, where there are now more saloons than in any other city of the country.

In accusing Mr. Hoover of vagueness on the liquor question Governor Roosevelt reminds us that he has been vague himself on practically every political question of the day. His tariff pronouncements have certainly not shown where he stood on tariff revision. In fact, he has been free to criticize, but very vague in telling the people where he stands himself. In referring to Governor Roosevelt's personal attacks on the President, the Chicago Tribune recently well said:

"Politically Mr. Hoover must win, if he does, against such brilliant accusations as Gov. Roosevelt has begun. There will be more of it. But what of the governor himself? When he has revealed bureaucracy floundering on the tide flats where the receding welfare of the country has left it, what affirmative does he add to his criticism? Is it not more bureaucracy? He damns the ineptitudes of the government's operations, but he proposes an extension of its range. If he seems to recognize that socialistic theories applied to private enterprise has sterilzed it he also reveals that he is himself government minded and that instinctively he believes that too much socilalism needs more socialism.

"This trend in Roosevelt himself, which takes on an altruistic mysticism in reference to the legendary forgotten man, is to be interpreted in terms of his political associations. He is the choice of some of the most dangerous men in Congress, most dangerous to American principles and the American nation. The campaign is still vaporish. The governor is painting the picture of the President as he sees him. The country waits for the full picture of himself."

PRACTICAL ROAD BUILDING

The most expensive roads are those which do not serve their communities well. By the same token, the most economical roads are those which best suit local conditions, whether they cost three thousand dollars a mile or thirty thousand dollars.

At this time many states, cities and counties doubtless consider dropping much of their road work as an economy measure. This is a mistake—almost any other government function should feel the axe of retrenchment first. Road construction and maintenance has been one of the most vital factors in fighting distress and unemployment the past three years. Every road dollar which we spend, so long as it is spent wisely after due study of conditions, will return continuous dividends in the future. It will do this by improving business conditions, encouraging tourist travel and broadening the markets and opportunities for agricultural sections.

Good secondary roads, which are weatherproof, skidproof and long-wearing, can be built with oil or asphalt surfaces for less than five thousand dollars a mile. These make perfect feeder arteries for connecting the towns and farming areas with the cross-country superhighways. They have been termed the "food" highways of the nation—a title they eminently deserve.

The good roads movement has been one of the most progressive phases of the twentieth century. The necessity of facilities for fast, economical and year-round transport can hardly be exaggerated. And roads will play an even greater part in the future of America than they have in the past.

The Messrs. Lawton retired from the management of the local electric plant and their place was assumed by C. W. Bird.

Immense piles of bark in the railroad yard on Liberty street taxed the capacity of the storage yard and overflowed on to the thoroughfare, making the roadway less than twenty-five feet wide. Those were the days when timber products were the chief source of revenue in this section.

A county Sunday school convention was held at Accident. The attendance was very large.

Superintendent Rudisill scored a success at Mountain Lake Park with 20,000 persons having visited the resort during the summer. Fully $40,000 was to be spent on new buildings and improvements. The lake was to be enlarged for boating and fishing.

TWENTY YEARS AGO

The dwellings of Mrs. M. A. Yost and Mrs. Thomas Cornwell at Mountain Lake Park were burned. The blaze was caused by the explosion of a pot of tar.

Carl Clark, 12, was rendered unconscious when a bolt of lightning struck the Clark home in Oakland.

Stephen G. Ashby and N. U. Bond left Oakland for a point in Kentucky where they were to be engaged in locating a railroad through a large timber tract owned by Mr. Bond.

The remaining portion of the Oakland Hotel was being torn down.

Former Sheriff Andrew Shartzer purchased from Herman Creutzburg the meat department in his store and took charge of that branch of the business.

At Elkader, Iowa, the town clock

At Elkador, Iowa, the town clock gained time the first half hour and lost the second half owing to a pair of pigeons which would perch on the big hand when it was going down, slipped off when it reached an angle when they lost their grip, and alighted again on the hand's upward move.

WELL TO FOLLOW FACTS, FOOLISH SUPERSTITIONS

Valuable Advice Given By State Health Department

Speaking of the teeth and their care, Dr. Richard C. Leonard, Chief of the Division of Oral Hygiene of the Maryland State Department of Health, said:

"Certain beliefs regarding the teeth and their care held by persons unacquainted with the facts, have nearly become superstitious. For instance, there is the unfounded one that a child who is born with one or more well formed teeth is destined for either good or bad fortune. This can probably be traced back to some of the old folk beliefs concerning children who show any unusual characteristics at birth. According to some of them, such developments signify good luck; according to others, they indicate the opposite, which is about the way life turns out, at any rate, whether we are born toothless or with a full set. As a matter of fact, fully formed teeth in the mouth of the newborn child signify nothing more than a probable excessive activity on nature's part in the formation of the child's dental apparatus.

"Another belief that amounts almost to a superstition is that it is dangerous for an expectant mother to have her teeth attended to, and that it will have an unfavorable effect on the health of the new-born child, if the mother has any teeth extracted or treated. Experience has shown that dental care can be safely given to practically every expectant mother. It should be part of the routine care she has during this period, and should never be neglected. The truth of the matter is that such treatment is essential to the health of both mother and child.

"A third very general belief, for which there is no foundation, is that there is no necessity for caring for the first, or 'baby teeth.' The mere fact that they are 'temporary' does not prevent them from needing strict supervision and the best of care. They are important organs, with a definite function, and with important tasks to perform. Neglect may make it impossible for them to do their work—which is chewing the food—properly. This is likely to open the way for serious systemic disease, and probably will result in discomfort and pain for the child. There is no question but that the baby teeth should have the same sort of care that the later teeth need.

"My advice in regard to all of these things is to rid your minds of unscientific, unfounded beliefs, and to base your dental practices upon actual facts."

Canning Tomato Juice

Tomatoes used for juice should be as red as can be obtained. They should be free from bad or soured spots. Cracked tomatoes may be used if the cracks have not had time to become contaminated with yeasts, molds or bacteria. This means the cracks can be only a few minutes old. It is impossible to cut a bad spot out of a tomato and have it good. One spoiled tomato in a can of soup is often what makes canned tomatoes as well as tomato juice spoil.

Preparation—Wash tomatoes clean. Remove cores and cut into quarters. Cook the tomatoes over a slow fire until soft or for about twenty minutes. Turn into a fine sieve and rub the tomatoes through until the remaining pulp is about the consistency of a thick paste, but do not rub all the pulp through the juice. Use this first extract for a sauce to can for the preparation of baked beans. Heat the juice to the boiling point, add 1 tablespoon of salt to a quart. Put the juice into sterilized glass jars and seal. Process both juice and puree in the pressure cooker at five pounds for 10 minutes or in water bath for 25 minutes.

Tomato juice may or may not be highly seasoned. As a rule, salt and perhaps a little pepper are quite sufficient. If a more highly seasoned juice is desired, add a stalk of celery to the tomatoes while cooking. A squeeze of lemon emphasizes the tomato flavor. A small amount of horseradish gives a new flavor.

Identifies Poisonous Snake

This spring while type mapping in the Savage River State forest in this county, Matthew Martin, resident forest warden, killed a three-foot poisonous snake that resembled a rattler, but in place of rattles a short blunt spine protruded. This spine was sent to the New York Zoological Gardens for identification where it was pronounced to be that of a cotton mouth moccasin, one of the four poisonous snakes of the United States.

This is the first time that this species of snake has been reported in Garrett county.

Sheep Infestation the Worst in Years, County Agent States

From inquiries received at the office of the county agent in Oakland it would indicate the parasitic infestation of sheep is worse than it has been for years. Farmers who have never had trouble with parasites before did not recognize the trouble, but upon examination heavy infestation of the stomach worms was found in fourteen flocks.

"The damage from parasites is greatest as a rule among lambs and young animals," Mr. Carter said. "The young tissues seem less resistant and the more sensitive nervous system breaks down more quickly under the influence of parasitic injury. Old sheep are subject to infestation but may not break down as quickly as lambs.

"Treatment for control of parasites most common in this section is effective and inexpensive. One to four dollars will treat 100 sheep, depending upon treatment selected. The copper sulphate and black leaf 40 treatment which has been published in The Republican a number of times is reliable and effective.

"Worm capsules consisting of Tetrachlorethylene are just as effective as the copper treatment. The capsules are made in two sizes, 2½ cc. for lambs and 5 cc. capsules for mature sheep.

"Anyone using commercial capsules should be sure to follow directions on package. Most important of all make sure the capsules you use are made of Tetrachlorethylene.

"Sheep infested with parasites will not bring top price on the market. Select your material and treat your sheep. I will be glad to assist anyone who feels he cannot administer the treatment," Mr. Carter concluded.

Winter Mulch Protects Plants From Heat Rather Than Cold

That a winter mulch of straw or leaves, or a covering of burlap is a protection to tender shrubs or other perennial plants from heat rather than cold will come as a surprise to many gardeners. Yet, this is the statement of Mark M. Shoemaker, assistant specialist in landscape gardening for the University of Maryland Extension Service.

The real purpose of the mulch, he states, is to prevent the sun from thawing out the ground too rapidly, as therein lies the danger to the roots. Successive freezings and thawings tend to heave newly planted perennials out of the ground, he says.

It is not likely, according to Mr. Shoemaker, that freezing of the ground can be prevented by the depth of mulches ordinarily put on. He advises waiting until after the first heavy frost, or freeze, before doing this garden chore and then doing it while the ground still is frozen.

Pruning in the fall or early spring is perfectly safe for some types of flowering shrubs, this specialist says, but it is disastrous for other types. He points out that some kinds of shrubs, such as Forsythea, Flowering Quince, and Weigala, which bloom early in the year, produce flowers on wood made the previous summer. Pruning that kind of plants in fall or early spring, he states, removes wood that would bear bloom. Late summer and fall blooming shrubs, such as hydrangea, althea, or creeping myrtle, bloom on wood made during the current season and may be pruned safely.

Without worrying about the reasons, Mr. Shoemaker says, it is a safe rule in most cases to prune immediately after blooming.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

One bit of satisfactory news which may have escaped a great many people in their concentration on the political campaign now being waged in America is that which came from Tokyo the other day to the effect that Vice Admiral Nomura, of the Japanese navy, would sail next month from Yokohama on a good will mission to the United States. According to the Associated Press dispatch from Tokyo his mission "is a result of what high naval officials designate as 'loose talk' on both sides of the Pacific concerning the possibility of conflict between Japan and the United States."

That there has been a great deal of talk about such a conflict may surprise those who have not studied the situation. Doubtless a great deal of it has come from persons and newspapers attempting to embarrass the national administration in a political way, and much more of it has come from those who desire to further the interests of Soviet Russia in America, and realize that from the Russian standpoint it would be fine to involve Uncle Sam in some real controversy with Russia's traditional enemy, Japan.

Which leads to the question of what is it all about? The misunderstanding, such as it is, centers around the Manchurian problem. The Japanese claim that control of Manchuria, either directly or indirectly, is a vital issue to them. They say that Japan's overflow population has been shut out of America, Australia and Canada, and that there is no place for it to go except in the direction of Manchuria. They say further that the Chinese have no orderly government and will not have any in this generation or the next, and that the disordered conditions in Manchuria seriously affect Japanese business and commerce and indirectly the commerce of the rest of the world.

On the other hand the people of the United States have always had an affectionate interest in the Chinese people, because of what seems to be their inherent unfortunate situation. Americans have hoped that the Chinese would eventually find themselves and establish a strong government, thusu adding to the peace of the world and the possibilities of foreign trade. For this reason they have resented the incursions of foreign powers into Chinese territory. The present situation was, of course, brought about by the Japanese excursion into Manchuria, which has led to the statement by Secretary Stimson to the effect that the United States will not recognize any government set up by force.

What makes the situation rather delicate is that Great Britain and France, the two leading military powers of Europe, do not see eye to eye with the United States in this matter. According to political observers in Europe they are willing for Japan to establish itself in Manchuria, feeling that this will go a long way toward pacifying the Orient and will keep Japan so busy she will not be able to interfere with British and French possessions in other points of the Orient. The only European country which is at all apt to dispute Japan's progress is Soviet Russia.

Now those in America who profess to fear a clash between Japan and America claim that when the question is threshed out before the League of Nations it will be found that Uncle Sam is almost isolated in his stand on Chinese affairs, except perhaps for the moral support of some of the smaller countries of Europe. England, France and Italy, they say, will be disposed to let Japan take her own course and will not worry any if she is involved in difficulties with the United States. They add that the discussion of the situation in the League circles is bound to cause a bitterness which may even disrupt the League itself.

While the situation from the standpoint of the United States might be fraught with danger if misunderstandings were allowed to develop on both sides, it must not be forgotten that there is no disposition on the part of the United States to go to war to enforce any sort of policy in the Orient, and this disposition will not change. While America may disagree with other powers about the ethics of the Manchurian situation she is not going to war about it, and it is doubtful whether Japan will attack America over the situation especially in view of the fact that she is already in Manchuria and apparently determined to stay there. But because the situation is delicate it is very satisfying to know that the distinguished Admiral Nomura is coming to America in an effort to clear up what misunderstandings may exist. He can be assured, in the United States, of an impartial hearing.
